To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a lugg'd bear.

To GIBE. v. n. [giber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer, And pass the bounds of modest merry-make, Her dalliance he despis'd.

Why that's the way to choke a gibling spirit, Whose influence is begot of that loose grace Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

Thus with talents well endur'd

To be scurrilous and rude, When you perty raise your snout, Fleer and gibe, and laugh and flout.

To GIBE. v. a. To reproach by contemptuous hints; to flout; to scoff; to ridicule; to treat with scorn; to sneer; to taunt.

When rioting in Alexandria, you Did pocket up my letters, and with taunts Did gibe my mislived out of audience.

Draw the beasts as I describe them, From their features, while I gibe them.

GIBE. n. f. [from the verb.] Sneer; hint of contempt by word or look; scoff; act or expression of scorn; taunt.

Mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns That dwell in every region of his face.

The rich have still a gibe in store, And will be monstrous witty on the poor.

If they would hate from the bottom of their hearts, their aversion would be too strong for little gibes every moment.

But the dean, if this secret should come to his ears,

Will never have done with his gibes and his jeers.

GIBER. n. f. [from gibe.] A sneerer; one who turns others to ridicule by contemptuous hints; a scoffer; a taunter.

You are well understood to be a more perfect giber of the table, than a necessary bēcher of the capitol.

He is a giber, and our present business Is of more serious consequence.

GIBINGLY. adv. [from gibe.] Scornfully; contemptuously.

His present portance, Gibingly and ungravelly he did fashion After th' inveterate hate he bears to you.

GIBLETS. n. f. [According to Minerva from goblet, goblet: according to Junius more properly from gibbet, game, French.] The parts of a goose which is cut off before it is roasted.

'Tis holyday; provide me better cheer: 'Tis holyday; and shall be round the year:

Shall I my household gods and genius cheat, To make him rich who grudges me my meat?

That he may loll at ease; and pamper'd high, When I am laid, may feed on gible pie?

GIBSTAFF. n. f.

1. A long staff to gage water, or to shove forth a vessel into the deep.

2. A weapon used formerly to fight beasts upon the stage.

GIDDILY. adv. [from giddy.]

1. With the head seeming to turn round.

2. Inconstantly; unsteadily.

Giddily, and be every where but at home, Such freedom doth a banishment become.

3. Carelessly; heedlessly; negligently.

The parts that fortune hath bestowed upon her, Tell her, I hold as giddily as fortune.

GIDDINESS. n. f. [from giddy.]

1. The state of being giddy or vertiginous; the sensation which we have when every thing seems to turn round.

Merriments and giddiness are rather when we rise after long sitting, than while we sit.

This blessed thistle, which is so sovereign a medicine against the giddiness of the brain; 'tis this will settle it.

Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain, Begin with giddiness and end in pain.

2. Inconstancy; unsteadiness; mutability; changeableness.

There be that delight in giddiness, and count it a bondage to fix a belief.

3. Quick rotation; inability to keep its place.

The indignation of heaven rolling and turning us, 'till at length such a giddiness seized upon government, that it fell into the very dregs of sectaries.

4. Frolick; wantonness of life.

Thou, like a contrite penitent, Charitably warn'd of thy sins, do'st repent These vanities and giddinesses.

GIDDY. adj. [gizig, Saxon. I know not whether this word may not come from gad, to wander, to be in motion, gad, gid, giddy.]

1. Vertiginous; having in the head a whirl, or sensation of circular motion, such as happens by disease or drunkenness.

Them rev'ling thus the Tentyrites invade, By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd.

2. Rotatory; whirling; running round with celerity.

As ixion fix'd, the wretch shall feel The giddy motion of the whirling mill.

3. Inconstant; mutable; unsteady; changeful.

Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm, More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,

Than women's are.

It may be gnats and flies have their imagination more mutable and giddy, as small birds likewise have.

Thanks to giddy chance, which never bears That mortal bliss should last for length of years;

She cast us headlong from our high estate, And here in hope of thy return we wait.

The giddy vulgar, as their fancies guide,

With noise say nothing, and in parts divide.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, the reverse of Pope, who hath always loved a domestic life.

4. That which causes giddiness.

The frequent errors of a pathless wood, The giddy precipice, and the dang'rous flood.

The sylphs through mystic mazes guide their way,

Through all the giddy circle they pursue.

5. Heedless; thoughtless; uncautious; wild.

Too many giddy foolish hours are gone, And in fantastick measures danc'd away.

How inexcusable are those giddy creatures, who, in the same hour, leap from a parent's window to a husband's bed.

6. Tottering; unfix'd.

As we have pack'd along Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, Methought that Gloster stumbled.

7. Intoxicated; elated to thoughtlessness; overcome by any overpowering intiment.

Art thou not giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Like one of two contending in a prize, That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes; Hearing applause and universal shout, Giddy in spirit, gazing still in doubt,

Whether those peals of praise be his or no.

To GIDDY. v. n. [from the noun.] To turn quick. Obsolete.

A sodaine North-wind fecht, With an extreame sea, quite about againe, Our whole endeavours; and our course constrain To giddy round.

GIDDYBRAINED. adj. [giddy and brain.] Careless; thoughtless.

Turn him out again, you unnecessary, useless, niddybrained ass;

GIDDYHEADED. adj. [giddy and head.] Without thought or caution; without steadiness or constancy.

And sooner may a gulling weather spy, By drawing forth heav'n's scheme decry, What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits, next year, Our giddyheaded antick youth will wear.

That men are so misaffected, melancholy, giddyheaded, hear the testimony of Solomon.

GIDDYPACED. adj. [giddy and pace.] Moving without regularity.

More than light airs, and recollected terms, Of these most brisk and giddypaced times.

GIER-EAGLE. n. f. [Sometimes it is written jer-eagle.] An eagle of a particular kind.

These fowls shall not be eaten, the swan and the pelican, and the gier-eagle.

GIFT. n. f. [from give.]

1. A thing given or bestowed; something conferred without price.

They presented unto him gifts, gold, and frankincense and myrrh.

Recall your gift, for I your pow'r confess; But first take back my life, a gift that's leis.

2. The act of giving.

Creator bounteous and benign, Giver of all things good, but fairest this

Of all thy gifts, nor envyest.

3. The right or power of bestowing.

They cannot give; For had the gift been theirs, it had not here

Thus grown.

No man has any antecedent right or claim to that which comes to him by free gift.

4. Oblation; offering.

Many nations shall come with gifts in their hands, even gifts to the king of heaven.

4. A bribe.

Thou shalt not wrest judgment, thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift; for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wife. Deut. xvi. 19.

6. Power; faculty.

And if the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakespeare.

She was lovely to attract

Thy love, not thy subjection, and her gifts
Were such as made government well seem'd Unseemly to bear rule. Milton.

He who has the gift of ridicule, finds fault with any thing that gives him an opportunity of exerting his talent. Addison.

GIFTED, adj. [from gift.]

1. Given; bestowed.

Made of my enemies the scorn and gaze,
To grind in brazen fetters, undertake,
With my heav'n gifted strength. Milt. Agonistes.

2. Endowed with extraordinary powers. It is commonly used ironically.

Two of their gifted brotherhood, Hacket and Coppinger, got up into a pease-cart, and har-rangued the people to dispose them to an insurrection. Dryden.

There is no talent so pernicious as eloquence,
to those who have it not under command; women, who are so liberally gifted by nature in this particular, ought to study the rules of female oratory. Addison's Freeholder.

GIG, n. f. [Etymology uncertain.]

1. Any thing that is whirled round in play.

Playthings, as tops, gigs, battledores, should be procured them. Locke.

2. [Gigia. Islandick.] A fiddle. Now out of use.

GIGANTICK, adj. [gigantes, Latin.] Suitable to a giant; big; bulky; enormous; likewise wicked; atrocious.

Others from the wall defend

With dart and jav'lin, stones, and sulphurous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milt.

I dread him not, nor all his giant-brood,
Though fame divulg'd him father of five sons,
All of gigantic size, Goliath chief. Milt. Agonistes.

The son of Hercules he justly seems,
By his broad shoulders, and gigantic limbs.

Dryden's Æneid.

The Cyclopean race in arms arose;
A lawless nation of gigantic foes. Pope's Odyssey.

To GIGGLE. v. n. [gichelen, Dutch.] To laugh idly; to titter; to grin with merry levity. It is retained in Scotland.

We shew our present joking, giggling race;
True joy consists in gravity and grace. Gar. Ep.

GIGGLER. n. f. [from giggle.] A laugher; a titterer; one idly and foolishly merry.

A sad wise valour is the brave complexion,
That leads the van, and swallows up the cities:
The giggler is a milk-maid, whom infection,
Or the fir'd beacon, frighteth from his ditties.

Herbert.

GIGLET. n. f. [gægl, Saxon; geyl, Dutch; gillit, Scottish, is still retained.] A wanton; a lascivious girl. Now out of use.

Young Talbot was not born

To be the pillage of a giglet wench. Sh. Hen. VI.

The fam'd Castibelan was once at point,

Oh giglet fortune! to master Cæsar's sword.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Away with those giglets too, and with the other confederate companion. Shak. Meas. for Meas.

GIGGOT. n. f. [French.] The hip joint. It seems to mean in Chapman's joint for the spit.

The inwards split,

They broil'd on coales, and ate: the rest, in giglets cut, they split. Chapman.

To GILD. v. a. pret. gilded, or gilt. [giltean,
Saxon.]

1. To wash over with gold; to cover with fo-liated gold.

The room was large and wide,
As it some gilt or solemn temple were:
Many great golden pillars did uprear
The massy roof. Spenser.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet.

Shakespeare's King Job.

And the gilded car of day

His glowing axle doth allay

In the steep Atlantick stream. Milton.

Purchasing riches with our time and care,

We lose our freedom in a gilded snare. Rescom.

When Britain, looking with a just disdain

Upon this gilded majesty of Spain,

And knowing well that empire must decline,

Whose chief support and sinews are of coin.

Waller.

Her joy in gilded chariots, when alive;

And love of ombre after death survive. Pope.

2. To cover with any yellow matter.

Thou did'st drink

The stale of horses and the gilded puddle,

Which beasts would cough at.

Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

3. To adorn with lustre.

No more the rising sun shall gild the morn,

Nor evening Cynthia fill her silver horn.

Pope's Messiah.

4. To brighten; to illuminate.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

5. To recommend by adventitious ornaments.

For my part, if a lie may do thee grace,
I'll gild it with the happiest terms I have.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Yet oh! th' imperfect piece moves more delight:

'Tis gilded o'er with youth, to catch the fight.

Dryden's Aureng.

GILDER. n. f. [from gild.]

1. One who lays gold on the surface of any other body.

Gilders use to have a piece of gold in their mouth, to draw the spirits of the quicksilver.

Bacon's Natural History.

We have here a gilder, with his anvil and hammer.

Broom.

2. A coin, from one shilling and six pence to two shillings.

Phil.

I am bound

To Persia, and want gilders for my voyage. Shak.

GILTING. n. f. [from gild.] Gold laid on any surface by way of ornament.

Silvering will fully and canker more than gilding, which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, there is profit. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

The church of the Annunciation, all but one corner of it, is covered with statues, gilding, and paint. Addison on Italy.

Could laureate Dryden Pimp and Fry'r engage,
And I not strip the gilding off a knave, Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?

Pope.

GILL. n. f. [agulla, Spanish; gula, Latin.]

1. The apertures at each side of a fish's head.

The leviathan,

Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,

And seems a moving land, and at his gills

Draws in, and at his trunk spouts out a sea.

Milton.

Fishes perform respiration under water by the gills.

Ray.

He hath two gill-fins; not behind the gills, as in most fishes, but before them.

Walton.

'Till they, of farther passage quite bereft,
Were in the mesh with gills entangl'd left.

King's Fisherman.

2. The flaps that hang below the beak of a fowl.

The turkeycock hath great and swelling gills, and the hen hath less. Bacon's Natural History.

3. The flesh under the chin.

In many there is no paleness at all; but, contrariwise, redness about the cheeks and gills, which is by the sending forth of spirits in an appetite to revenge.

Bacon's Natural History.

Like the long bag of flesh hanging down from the gills of the people in Piedmont.

Swift.

4. [Gill, barbarous Latin.] A measure of liquids containing the fourth part of a pint.

Every bottle must be rinsed with wine: flame, out of mistaken thrift, will rinse a dozen with the fame: change the wine at every second bottle: a gill may be enough. Swift.

5. A kind of measure among the tinn-ers.

They measure their block-tin by the gill, which containeth a pint. Caveau.

6. In the northern counties it is half a pint of liquid measure.

7. [From gillan, the old English way of writing Julian, or Juliana.] The appellation of a woman in ludicrous language.

I can, for I will,

Here at Burley o' th' Hill,

Give you all your fill,

Each Jack with his Gill. Ben Jon. Gypsie.

8. [Gbelidonium.] The name of a plant; ground-ivy.

9. Malt liquor medicated with ground-ivy.

GILLHOUSE. n. f. [gill and house.] A house where gill is sold.

These shall each alehouse, thee each gillhouse mourn,

And answering ginshops fourer sighs return. Pope.

GILLYFLOWER. n. f. [Either corrupted from July flower, or from giroflée, French.]

Gillyflowers or rather Julyflowers, so called from the month they blow in, may be reduced to these sorts; red and white, purple and white, scarlet and white. Martimer's Husbandry.

In July come gillyflowers of all varieties. Bacon.

Fair is the gillyflower of gardens sweet,

Fair is the marygold, for pottage meet.

Gay's Pastoral.

GILT. n. f. [from gild.] Golden snow; gold laid on the surface of any matter. Now obsolete.

Our gaynets and our gills are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary. Shakespeare's Timon of Athens.

GILT The participle of GILD, which see.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way.

Pope.

GILTHEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.]

1. A sea-fish.

Dill.

2. A bird.

He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres. Hakewill.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [An old word.] Neat; spruce;
well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gim, derived from engine.]

A light or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,

The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? Jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds?

Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

GIMLET. n. f. [giblet, guimbelot, French.] A borer with a screw at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit.

Moxon.

GIMMAL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and An-worth to be derived from gimelles, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical.

Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.] Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery. Hannet.

I think by some odd gimmal; or device

Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out so as they do.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

GIMMEL.

GIN

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery.

The holding together of the parts of matter has so confounded me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magick. Moore's Divine Dialogues.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,

With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pastime make. Sidney.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin, Hath slain Sir Mordant. Spenser.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If those, who have but fenfe, can shun
The engines that have them annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,

If I could not thy gins avoid. Ben Jonson's Forest.

I know thy trains,
Though dearly to my cost, thy gins and toils;

No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd.
Milton.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,

Without th' expence of cheese and bacon. Hudib.

Keep from flaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin. Hudibras.

2. Anything moved with screws, as an engine of torture.

Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin. Spens.

3. A pump worked by rotatory fails.

The delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry. Rey.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water driving on the outside of the gin pumps of Mostyn coalpits.

Woodward on Fossils.

4. [Contracted from GENEVA, which fee.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin. Pope.

Gin shops fourer sighs return. Pope.

G'NGER. n. f. [zinziber, Lat. gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds. Miller.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acrid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves.

Hill's Materia Medica.

Or wasting ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow.

Pope's Dunciad.

G'NGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.] A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some other aromatick feeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou shoud' have it to buy gingerbread.

Her currans there and gooseberries were spread,
With the enticing gold of gingerbread. King's Cook.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks' frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames. Swift.

G'NGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is't that you Took up so gingerly? Shakspr. Two Gent. of Vir.

G'NGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tendernefs. Di?

G'NGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

GIR

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlude appulse, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of perviousness. Holder's Elements of Speech.

To G'NGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,
And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found.

Gay's Trivia.

Once, we confefs, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstairs, told the crew,
Old Cato is as great a rogue as you. Pope's Epistles.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

To G'NGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells the gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

G'NGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

G'NGLYMOID. adj. [γινγλυμοειδής and ἰσχυρ.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the incus by a double or ginglymoid joint. Hold. Element of Speech.

G'NGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each other's cavity, of which the elbow is an instance. Wise man.

G'NGNET. n. f. [γινγνέτις.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish genet, improperly written for ginnet.

G'NGSING. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent.

It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIP. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [Corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to loose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frantic gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks diffembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;
A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick heve and sheers.

I, near yon stile, three fallow gyffes met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.

The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Estrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes:
The gipsy knows her pow'r, and flies. Prior.

G'IRASOLE. n. f. [girasole, French.]

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac. iii. 25.

My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Gird on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milt.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is gird'd to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in reguerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezek. xvii. 10.

Typhphone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together fow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if it hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton's Par. Lost.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To inclose; to incircle.

That Nyctean isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the gods. Shakspeare.

To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the origin; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gride or cut.] To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to sneer.

This wondred error growth
At which our critics gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me: the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang: it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester relent. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheist feels. Tillotson.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from gyn of the same signification; Minghe from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from berlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, harlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopla for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unfledg'd days was my wife a girl.
Shaksp.

I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shaksp.
The foole Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke,

Proude girl like, that doth ever beare her dowre upon her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimic follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl, like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suited a girl;

We are the earth; and they, Like moles within us, heave and cast about;

And 'till they foot and clutch their prey; They never cool, much less give out. Herbert.

Madam, I always believ'd you so stout, That for twenty denials you would not give out. Swift.

GIVER, n. f. [from give.] One that gives; donor; bestower; distributor; granter.

Well we may afford Our givers their own gifts. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By thee how fairly is the giver now Repaid? But gratitude in thee is lost Long since. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

I have not liv'd since first I heard the news; The gift the guilty giver doth accuse. Dryden's Aurengzeib.

Both gifts destructive to the givers prove; Alike both lovers fall by those they love. Pope.

GIVES, n. f. Fetters or shackles for the feet. Grizzard, n. f. [from gifer, French; gigeria, Latin.] It is sometimes called gizzern.

1. The strong musculous stomach of a fowl.

Fowls have two ventricles, and pick up stones to convey them into their second ventricle, the gizzern. Mort.

In birds there is no mastication in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop, a kind of antestomach, where it is moistened by some proper juice from the glandules distilling in there, and thence transferred into the gizzard, or musculous stomach. Ray.

They nestle near the throne, By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially used for apprehension or conception of mind: as, he frets his gizzard, he harasses his imagination.

But that which does them greatest harm, Their spiritual gizzards are too warm; Which puts the overheated fots In fevers still. Hudibras.

Satisfaction and restitution lie so cursedly hard upon the gizzards of our publicans, that their blood is not half so dear to them as the treasure in their coffers. L'Estrange.

GLA'CIAL, adj. [glacial, French; glacialis, Lat.] Icy; made of ice; frozen.

To GLA'CIATE. v. n. [glacies, Latin; glacer, French.] To turn into ice.

GLACIATION, n. f. [from glaciate.] The act of turning into ice; ice formed.

Ice is plain upon the surface of water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vul. Err.

GLA'CIOUS, adj. [glacio, Latin.] Icy; resembling ice.

Although exhaled and placed in cold conservatories, it will crystallize and shoot into glacius bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLA'CIS, n. f. [French.] In fortification, a sloping bank. It is more especially taken for that which rangeth from the parapet of the covered way to the level on the side of the field. Harris.

GLAD, adj. [glæd, Saxon; glad, Danish.] 1. Cheerful; gay; in a state of hilarity.

They blest the king, and went into their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings viii. 66.

Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light. Milton.

The wily adder blithe and glad. Milton.

Thither they Hasted with glad precipitation. Milton.

2. Wearing a gay appearance; fertile; bright; showy

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them, and the desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose. Isaiah xxxv.

Then first adorn'd
With their bright luminaries, that set and rose, Glad ev'ning and glad morn crown'd the fourth day. Milton

3. Pleased; elevated with joy. It has generally of, sometimes at or with before the cause of gladness: perhaps of is most proper, when the cause of joy is something gained or possessed; and at or with, when it is some accident befallen himself or another.

I am glad to see your worship. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
He hath an uncle in Messina will be very much glad of it. Shakesp. Much Ado.

He that is glad at calamities shall not be unpunished. Proverbs.

He glad
Of her attention, gain'd with serpent tongue,
His fraudulent temptation thus began. Milton.
If he be my enemy, let him triumph; if he be my friend, he will be glad of my repentance.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood;
The Trojan, glad with sight of hostile blood,
His faction drew. Dryden's Fables, Pref.
Glad of a quarrel strait I clap the door. Pope.

4. Pleading; exhilarating.

Her conversation
More glad to me than to a miser money is. Sidney.
5. Expressing gladness.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way, a God, a God appears!
Pope's Messiah.

6. It is used in a familiar sense, approaching to ludicrousness.

I would be glad to learn from those who pronounce that the human soul always thinks, how they know it. Locke.

To GLAD, v. a. [from the adjective.] To make glad; to cheer; to exhilarate.

He faw rich nectar-thaws release the rigour
Of th' icy North: from frost-bound Atlas hands
His adamantine fetters fall: green vigour Gladding the Scythian rocks, and Lybian sands.
Craighaw.

It glads me
To see so many virtues thus united,
To restore justice and dethrone oppression. Ottway.
Each drinks the juice that glads the heart of man.
Pope.

If justice Philips' coftive head
Some frigid rhymes disburles,
They shall like Persian tales be read;
And glad both babes and nurfes. Swift.

To GLADDER, v. a. [from glad.] To cheer; to delight; to make glad; to exhilarate.

Oh, he was all made up of love and charms!
Delight of every eye! When he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him.

Addison's Cato.

A kind of vital heat in the soul cheers and gladden's her, when she does not attend to it.

Addison's Spectator.

GLADDER, n. f. [from glad.] One that makes glad; one that gladdens; one that exhilarates.

Thou gladder of the mount Cytheron,
Have pity, Goddess. Dryden.

GLADE, n. f. [from glopan, to be hot, or to shine; whence the Danish glod, and the obsolete English glad, a red hot coal.] A lawn or opening in a wood. Lucas. It is taken for an avenue through a wood, whether open or shaded, and has therefore epithets of opposite meaning.

So flam'd his eyes with rage and rancorous ire;
But far within, as in a hollow glade,
Those glaring lamps were set, that made a dreadful shade. Spenser.

Lo where they spy'd, how in a gloomy glade
The lion sleeping lay in secret shade. Hub. Tale.

O might I here
In solitude live savage, in some glade,
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening. Milton's Par. Lost.

When any, favour'd of high Jove,
Chances to pass through this adventurous glade,
Swift as a sparkle of a glancing star
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Mil.
For noonday's heat are clofer arbours made,
And for fresh ev'ning air the op'n'r glade.

There, interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shun each other's shades.
Pope.

By the heroes armed shades,
Glitt'ring through the gloomy glades;
By the youths that dy'd for love,
Wand'ring in the myrtle grove,
Restore, restore Eurydice to life!
Oh! take the husband, or restore the wife!
Pope's St. Cecil.

She smil'd, array'd
With all the charms of fun-shine, stream and glade,
New drest and blooming as a bridal maid. Harte.

GLADEN, n. f. [from gladius, Latin, a sword.]

GLADDER, n. f. [Latin; gladiateur, French.]

A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denb.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

GLADFULNESS, n. f. [glad and fulness.] Joy;
gladness. Obsolete.

And there him rests in riotous suffiance
Of all his gladfulness, and kingly joyance. Spenser.

GLADIATOR, n. f. [Latin; gladiateur, French.]

A swordplayer; a prizefighter.

Then whilst his foe each gladiator foils,
The atheist, looking on, enjoys the spoils. Denb.

Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

GLADLY, adv. [from glad.] Joyfully; with gayety; with merriment; with triumph; with exultation.

For his particulars I'll receive him gladly;
But not one follower. Shakesp. King Lear.

You are going to see us right; and 'tis an advantage every body will gladly see you engross the-glory of. Blount to Pope.

GLADNESS, n. f. [from glad.] Cheerfulness;
joy; exultation.

By such degrees the spreading gladness grew
In every heart, which fear had froze before:

The standing streets with so much joy they view,

That with less grief they perish'd they deplore.
Dryden.

GLADDSOME, adj. [from glad.]

1. Pleased; gay; delighted.

The highest angels to and fro descend;
From highest heaven in gladsome company. Fairy Queen.

The gladsome ghost in circling troops attend,
And with unweary'd eyes behold their friend. Dryden.

2. Causing joy; having an appearance of gayety.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay;
Of opening heav'n they sung and gladsome day. Prior.

GLADDSOMELY, adv. [from gladsome.] With gayety and delight.

GLADDSOMENESS, n. f. [from gladsome.] Gayety; showiness; delight.

GLAIRE, n. f. [glæp, Saxon, amber; glar, Danish; glafs, glavre, French; glarea, Latin.]

1. The white of an egg.

Take the glaire of eggs, and strain it as short as water. Peacham on Drawing.

2. A kind of halbert.

To GLAIRE, v. a. [glairer, French; from the noun.] To smear with the white of an egg. This word is still used by the bookbinders.

GLANCE, n. f. [glantz, German, glitter.]

1. A sudden shoot of light or splendour.

His off'ring soon propitious fire from heav'n Consum'd with nimble glance, and grateful steam:

The other's not; for his was not sincere.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. A stroke or dart of the beam of sight.

The aspects which procure love are not gazings, but sudden glances and dartings of the eye.

Bacon's Natural History.

There are of those sort of beauties which last but for a moment; some particularly of a violent passion, some graceful action, a smile, a glance of an eye, a disdainful look, and a look of gravity.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Boldly the look'd, like one of high degree:
Yet never seem'd to cast a glance on me;

At which I inly joy'd, for, truth to say,
I felt an unknown awe, and some dismay. Harte.

3. A snatch of sight; a quick view.

The ample mind takes a survey of several objects with one glance. Watts on the Mind.

To GLANCE, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot a sudden ray of splendour.

He double blows about him fiercely laid,
That glancing fire out of the iron play'd,
As sparkles from the anvil use,

When heavy hammers on the wedge are sway'd.
Spenser.

When through the gloom the glancing lightnings fly,

Heavy the rattling thunders roll on high. Rowe.

2. To fly off in an oblique direction.

He has a little gall'd me, I confess;
But as the jest did glance away from me,
'Tis ten to one it maim'd you two outright.

3. To strike in an oblique direction.

Through Paris' shield the forceful weapon went,
His corset pierces, and his garment rends,
And glancing downwards near his flank descends. Pope.

4. To view with a quick cast of the eye; to play the eye.

O th' sudden up they rise and dance,
Then sit again, and sigh and glance;

Then dance again, and kiss. Suckling.

Mighty dulness crown'd,
Shall take through Grub-street her triumphant round;

And her Parnassus glancing o'er at once,
Behold a hundred sons, and each a dunce. Pope's Dunciad.

5. To censure by oblique hints.

How can'st thou thus, for shame, Titania,
Glance at my credit with Hippolita,

Knowing I know thy love to Theus? Shakesp.

Some men glance and dart at others, by justifying themselves by negatives; as to say, this I do not. Bacon.

I have never glanced upon the late designed procession of his holiness and his attendants, notwithstanding it might have afforded matter to many ludicrous speculations. Addison.

He had written verses, wherein he glanced at a certain reverend doctor, famous for dulness. Swift.

To GLANCE, v. a. To move nimbly; to shoot obliquely.

Glancing an eye of pity on his losses,
Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

GLANCINGLY, adv. [from glance.] In an oblique broken manner; transiently.

Sir Richard Hawkins hath done something in this kind, but brokenly and glancingly, intending chiefly a discourse of his own voyage.

Hakewill on Providence.

GLAND, n. f. [glans, Latin; gland, French.]

All the glands of a human body are reduced to two sorts, viz. conglobate and conglomerate. A conglobate gland is a little smooth body, wrapt up in a fine skin, by which it is separated from all the other parts, only admitting an artery and nerve to pass it, and giving way to a vein and excretory canal to come out: of this sort are the glands in the brain, the labial glands, and testes. A conglom-erate gland is composed of many little conglobate glands, all tied together, and wrapt up in the common tunicle or membrane. Quincy.

The abscess begun deep in the body of the glands. Wijeman.

The glands, which o'er the body spread,
Fine complicated clues of nervous thread,
Involv'd and twist'd with th' arterial duct,
The rapid motion of the blood obstruct. Blackm.

GLANDERS, n. f. [from gland.] In a horse is the running

running of corrupt matter from the nose, which differs in colour according to the degree of the malignity, being white, yellow, green, or black.

Farrier's Dictionary.

His horse is possest with the glanders, and like to mose in the chine. Shaksp. Tam. of the Shrew.

GLANDIFEROUS. adj. [glans and fero, Latin.] Bearing mast; bearing acorns, or fruit like acorns.

The beech is of two sorts, and numbered amongst the glandiferous trees. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GLANDULE. n. f. [glandula, Latin; glandule, French.] A small gland serving to the secretion of humours.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate this juice from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are called ductus salivales. Ray.

GLANDULOSITY. n. f. [from glandulous.] A collection of glands.

In the upper parts of worms are found certain white and oval glandulosities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

GLANDULOUS. adj. [glandulosus, Latin; glanduleux, French; from glandule.] Pertaining to the glands; subsisting in the glands; having the nature of glands.

The beaver's bags are no testicles, or parts official unto generation, but glandulous substances, that hold the nature of emunctories.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Such constitutions must be subject to glandulous tumours, and ruptures of the lymphaticks.

Arbutnot on Aliiments.

TO GLARE. v. n. [glaren, Dutch.]

1. To shine so as to dazzle the eyes.

After great light, if you come suddenly into the dark, or, contrariwise, out of the dark into a glaring light, the eye is dazzled for a time, and the sight confused. Bacon.

His glaring eyes with anger's venom swell,

And like the brand of foul Alecto flame. Fairfax.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and grofs hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately without ambition. Dryden.

The court of Cacus stands reveal'd to fight;

The cavern glares with new admitted light. Dryden's Æneid.

Alas, thy dazzled eye

Beholds this man in a false glaring light,

Which conquest and success have thrown upon him. Addison.

2. To look with fierce piercing eyes.

Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,

Which thou dost glare with. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Look, how pale he glares! Shaksp. Hamlet.

Now friends no more, nor walking hand in hand;

But when they met they made a furly stand,

And glar'd, like angry lions, as they pass'd,

And wish'd that every look might be their last. Dryden's Fables.

3. To shine ostentatiously, or with too much laboured lustre.

The most glaring and notorious passages are none of the finest, or most correct. Felton on the Classics.

TO GLARE. v. a. To shoot such splendour as the eye cannot bear.

One spirit in them rul'd, and every eye

Glar'd lightning, and shot forth pernicious fire

Among th' accurs'd, that wither'd all their strength. Milton.

GLARE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Overpowering lustre; splendour, such as dazzles the eye.

The frame of burnish'd steel that cast a glare

From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air. Dryden's Fables.

I have grieved to see a person of quality gliding

by me in her chair at two o'clock in the morning, and looking like a spectre amidst a glare of flam-beaux: Addison's Guardian.

Here in a grotto, shelter'd close from air,

And screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,

She sighs for ever. Pope's Rape of the Lock.

2. A fierce piercing look.

About them round,

A lion now he stalks with fiery glare.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glaireux, Fr. glareus, Latin; from glare.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glaz, Saxon; glas, Dutch, as Pezon imagines from gläs, British, green. In Erse it is called klann, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glaz cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glaz, from the verb glanzen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it resembles. Peacbam on Drawing.

Glaz is thought so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and it is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenades rain, by sudden burst

Dislodging murderous bowels, fragments of steel

And stones, and glaz and nitrous grain adust. Philips.

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more

And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glaz

Which shews me many more. Shak. Macbeth.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glaz, copy and book,

That fashion'd others. Shaksp. Henry IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from fight,

With tinkling glaz, to betray

The larks that in the mehes light. Dryden's Horace.

4. An Hour GLASS. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Were my wife's liver

Infected as her life, she would not live

The running of one glaz. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royall self did live, no more his noble

fonne,

The golden Meleager now, their *glaz*es all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty,

That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glaz

Did break 't' th' rinsing. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

When thy heart

Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul

Prompts to pursue the sparkling glaz, be sure

'Tis time to shun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glaz more will not make him drunk, that one glaz hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor's Rule of living bely.

The first glaz may pass for health, the second for good humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass.

The moon whose orb

Through optick glaz the Tufcan artist views. Milton.

Like those who survey the moon by *glaz*es, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glaz eyes;

And, like a scurvy politician, seem

To see the things thou dost not. Shaksp. King Lear.

Glaz bottles are more fit for this second fining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion,

And in thy case do glaz mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt in his eye,

As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy;

Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence

they were *glaz*ed,

Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shaksp. As You Like It.

3. To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps *glaz*ed over by a vi-trifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glaz and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a *glaz*furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glaz and gazing.] Fini-cal; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, *glaz*gazing, finical rogue. Shaksp.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glaz and grinder.] One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The *glaz*grinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glaz and house.] A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Roman Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vi-trified, and prepared at the *glaz*houses. Add. on Ita.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glaz and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the *glaz*man. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glaz and metal.] Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with *glaz*metal. Bacon's Phys. Rem.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glaz and work.] Manufactory of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush

the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their *glaz*works. Bacon's Natural History.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.]

It hath an apetalous flower, wanting the em-palement; for the stamina, or chives, and the em-broyles grow on the extreme part of the leaves;

these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed.

The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of Summer; and, having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap.

These herbs are by the country people called kelp.

From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or *glaz*wort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GLASSY. adj. [from glaz.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a *glaz*y substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man! proud man!

Drest in a little brief authority,

Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd:

His *glaz*y essence, like an angry ape,

Plays such fantastick tricks before his heaven,

As makes the angels weep. Shaksp. Measure for Measure.

There is a willow grows aslant a brook,

That shews his hoary leaves in the *glaz*y stream. Shaksp. As You Like It.

The

GLE

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred

The hoary frosts that fall on Winter's head? Sandys.
The glassy deep. Dryden's Aeneid.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MED-LAR.

This species of thorn produces some bunches of flowers in Winter, and flowers again in the Spring. Miller.

GLAUcoma. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucoma, Fr.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a greyish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy.

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAVE. n. f. [glave, French; glaf, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,

Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glave hath pendant by his side. Fainfax.

When zeal with aged clubs and glaves,
Gave chase to rockets and white staves. Hudibras.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; glupan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Estrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glaze, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.

Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware; [from the French glazifier, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects.

Shakespeare's Richard II.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Grew's Ceph. Sac.

White, with other strong colours, with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryd. Duff.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glasfer, of glaz.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into the rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set, and fastened by the glazier.

The dext'rous glazier strong returns the bound,
And ginsling fashies on the penthouse found. Gay's Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte.

GLEAM. n. f. [glehoma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the fair Dodonian tree far seen Upon seven hills to spread his gladfome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Aufonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast. Dryden's Aurengze.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating forests paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadful gleams,
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden conurbation.

Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled East. Thomson's Summer.

2. To shine.

On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flushing; darting sudden conurbations of light.

In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [glaner, French; as Skinner thinks, from granum, Lat.]

1. To gather what the gatherers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth, ii.

Cheap conquest for his following friends remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryd.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Palæmon's fields. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

Gather
So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, afflicts him thus. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges, xx. 45.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his resplendent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Aeneid.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLENER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant statesman. Locke.

GLENNING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLE

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in fedy bowers;

The grassy garlands loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.

Fertile of corn the glebe, of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespass done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Ayliffe's Parergon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flatt'ry! thy malignant feeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the corn appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE. n. f. [glitdaglie, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the gleds, the kite, and the vulture. Deuteronomy.

GLEE. n. f. [glizge, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gayety. It anciently signified music played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight, Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many wayfars make themselves glees, by vexing the inhabitants; who again foreflew not to baigne them with perfume. Carew's Survey of Corn.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!

No happiness is now reserv'd for me. Gay's Pasto.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free. Harte.

GLEED. n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word.

GLEEFUL. adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Aaron, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast. Shak.

GLEEK. n. f. [glizge, Saxon.] Musick; or musician.

What will you give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the minstrel.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

To GLEEK. v. a. [glizman, in Saxon, is a mimic or a droll.]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.

I can gleek upon occasion. Shakespeare's Midf. Night.

I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice. Shakespeare's Henry V.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimicry or drollery.

To GLEAN. v. n. To shine with heat or polish.

I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place. Thomson.

Those who labour

The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleening armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

GLEET. n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glidan, Saxon, to run softly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a fore.

A hard dry eschar, without either matter or gleet. Wifeman's Surgery.

To GLEET. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor. His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops. Wifeman's Surgery.

2. To run flowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.

Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

GLEETY. adj. [from gleet.] Ichory; thinly fanious.

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gletty, you may suspect it corrupting. Wifeman.

GLEN. n. f. [glenn, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is start,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen.

Spenser.

GLEW. n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB. adj. [from glis, Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor any thing to cement them: the parts being glib and continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.

Burnet's Theor.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope, compactly twisted together, with a noose that slipt as glib as a birdcatcher's gill. Arbushnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and oily art
To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.
There was never so much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English. Locke.

Now Curl his shop from rubbish drains;
Three genuine tomes of Swift remains:
And then, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Tibbald, More and Cibber. Swift.

Be sure he's a fine spoken man:
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran. Swift.

GLIB. n. f.

The Irish have from Scythians mantles and long glibs; which is a thick curled bush of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disguising them. Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB. v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue. Shakespeare's Wint. Tale.

GLIBLY. adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose stomachs as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction.

Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS. n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polish'd ice-like glibness doth enfold
The rock. Chapman's Odyssey.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness, the more to facilitate its moving.

Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE. v. n. [glidan, Saxon; gliden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By Eart, among the dusty vallies, glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood. Fairfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden's Æneid.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood. Dryden's Æneid.

Where stray the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred Isis glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides. Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.
Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystic wonders of your silent state. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.
If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I Glide thither in a day. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave. Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a smart
As if cold steel had glided through his heart. Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye, and disappear. Dryden.

GLIDE. n. f. [from the verb.] Lapse; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreathed itself,
Who, with her head nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLIDER. n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.
The glance into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;

Therewith my soul was sharply gried,
Such wounds soon waxen wider. Spenser's Pastorals.

GLIKE. n. f. [gliz, Saxon. See GLEEK.] A fauer; a scoff; a flout. Not now in use.

Where's the bastard's braves, and Charles his glikes? Shakespeare.

To GLIMMER. v. n. [glimmer, Danish, to shine; glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.
The West yet glimmers with some streaks of day. Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my side,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well appareld,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a blind man's eye. Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray Glimmers upon the pure and native day. Cowley.

Off in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her. Milton.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimmering of these livid flames Casts pale and dreadful? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the wall's of heav'n
Shoots far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length began to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day. Prior.

Off by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimmering socket dies.

When rosy morning glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

been at court, got a glimmering who they were.

The Pagan priesthood was always in the druids;
and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted. Swift.

GLIMMER. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Faint splendour; weak light.
2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the names of mica and glimmer. Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic; talc, catilver, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black. Woodward.

GLIMPSE. n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.
Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them. Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of, we in the dark, grope after. Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.
Light as the lightning glimpse they ran? Milton.

My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires;
My manhood, long misled by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own. Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.
There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face Strikes through the solid darkness of the place. Cowley.

If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden's Fables.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.
If, while this weary'd flesh draws fleeting breath,
Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of delight, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.
O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon through the shade. Milton.

Some, God punisheth exemplary in this world, that we might have a taste or a glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of god-like liberty remain'd. Dryden's Virgil.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.
No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakespeare.

To GLISTEN. v. n. [glitan, German.] To shine;
to sparkle with light.

The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glistening earth,
With looks of dumb despair. Thomson's Winter.

The ladies eyes glisten'd with pleasure. Richardson's Pamela.

To GLISTER. v. n. [glitan, German; glisteren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in Summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine. Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,

Than

Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden furrow. Shakspeare Henry VIII.
The golden fun

Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shakspeare.
All that glisters is not gold. Shakspeare Merch. of Ven.
You were more the eye and talk

Of the court to-day, than all

Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson Underw.
When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass, the mountains glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Mac. vi. 39.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLISTER. n. f. [Properly written clyster, from κλυστήρ.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Bush with new state airs,

His lordship's premier minister;

And who, in all profound affairs,

Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which, descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glitzman, Saxon.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.

Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade.

Bacon's Phys. Rem.

Before the battle joins, from afar

The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.

Dryden's Virgil.

Scarce had'st thou time t' unsheath thy conqu'r-ing blade;

It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In glit'ring scenes, o'er her own heart severe;

In crowds collected; and in courts sincere. Young.

GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.

Clad

With what permissive glory since his fall

Was left him, or false glitter. Milt. Par. Lost.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in it.

Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our drefs and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Law.

GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participial used by Chaucer and the old English poets
This participial termination is still retained in Scottland.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.] With shining lustre.

To GLOAR. v. a. [gloaren, Dutch.]

1. To quint; to look askew. Skinner.

2. In Scotland, to stare: as, what a gloarand quean.

To GLOAT. v. n. [This word I conceive to be ignorantly written for glow.] To cast side glances as a timorous lover.

Teach every grace to smile in your behalf,

And her deluding eyes to gloat for you.

Roscoe's Jane Shore.

GLOBARD. n. f. [from glow.] A glow worm.

GLOBATED. adj. [from globe.] Formed in shape of a globe; spherical; spheroidal.

GLOBE. n. f. [globe, French; globus, Latin.]

1. A sphere; a ball; a round body: a body of which every part of the surface is at the same distance from the centre.

2. The terraqueous ball.

The youth, whose fortune the vast globe obey'd,
Finding his royal enemy betray'd,

Wept at his fall.

Stepney.

Where God declares his intention to give dominion, he meant that he would make a species of creatures that should have dominion over the other species of this terrestrial globe. Locke.

3. A sphere in which the various regions of the earth are geographically depicted, or in which the constellations are laid down according to their places in the sky.

The astrologer who spells the stars,
Mistakes his globe, and in her brighter eye
Interprets heaven's physiognomy. Cleveland.

These are the stars,

But raise thy thought from sense, nor think to find

Such figures there as are in globes design'd. Creech.

4. A body of foldiers drawn into a circle.

Him round

A globe of fiery ferephim inclos'd,

With bright imblazoning, and horrent arms.

Milton.

GLOBE Amaranth, or everlasting flower. n. f. [ama-rantoides.] A flower.

Miller.

GLOBE Daisy. n. f. A kind of flower.

GLOBE Fish. n. f. A kind of orbicular fish.

GLOBE Ranunculus. n. f. [belleboro-ranunculus.]
A plant. Miller.

GLOBE Tbistle. n. f. [carduus orbiculatus.] A plant.

Miller.

GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical;
round.

Regions, to which

All thy dominion, Adam, is no more

Than what this garden is to all the earth,

And all the sea; from one entire globose

Stretch'd into longitude. Milt. Par. Lost.

Then form'd the moon

Globose, and ev'ry magnitude of stars.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

GLOBOSITY. n. f. [from globose.] Sphericity;
sphericalness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all: no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth.

Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin. When the accent is intended to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globose, when on the first globous:
I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.] Spherical;
round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far

Than all this globose earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turbid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, of dreadful hiss,
Singing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globulus, Latin.] Having the form of a small sphere; round; spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Grew's Censol. Saura.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globulaire, Fr.]
A flosculous flower. Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French; globulus, Lat.]
Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope. These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quick-silver. Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the hale.

Newton's Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elas-tick, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globules, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

To GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomerare, Latin.] To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerat'd, but discontinuous particles are conglobat'd.

GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Latin.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.

The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOMEROUS. adj. [glomeratus, Latin.] Gathered into a ball or sphere, as a ball of thread.

GLOOM. n. f. [glomang, Saxon, twilight.]

1. Imperfect darkness; dismalness; obscurity; defect of light.

Glowing embers through the room,

Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton.

This feat,

That we must change for heav'n? This mournful gloom,

For that celestial light? Milton's Paradise Lost.

The still night, not now, as ere men fell,

Wholefome, and cool, and mild; but with black
air

Accompany'd; with damps, and dreadful glam.
Milton.

Now warm in love, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Loft in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

2. Cloudiness of aspect; heaviness of mind;
fullness.

To GLOOM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine obscurely, as the twilight. This sense is not now in use.

His glit'ring armour made

A little glooming light much like a shade. Spenser.

Scarcely had Phæbus in the glooming East

Yet harnessed his fiery footed team. Spenser.

2. To be cloudy; to be dark.

3. To be melancholy; to be fullen.

GLOOMILY. adv. [from gloomy.]

1. Obscurely; dimly; without perfect light; dismally.

2. Sullenly; with cloudy aspect; with dark intentions; not cheerfully.

See, he comes: how gloomily he looks! Dryd.

Gloomily retir'd the spider lives. Tibbison.

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look;
heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humour,
and makes them grow sullen and unconvertable.

Collier of the Splen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy. Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowsy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightfome noon.

Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier,
just as the sun is bright or more overcast.

Pope's Letters.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r, by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Sullen; melancholy; cloudy of look; heavy of heart.

GLO'RIEN. adj. [from glory.] Illustrious; honourable; decorated with glory; dignified with honours. Not in use.

Old respect,

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son, now captive, hither hath inform'd

Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age

Came lagging after. Milton's Agonistes.

Vol. I. N^o. 20. 5 C GLORI

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

TO GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in.

Shakespeare's King John.
Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them fit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hooker.
This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alleged at that time as an argument for the truth.

Hooker.
Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,
That we for thee may glorify the Lord.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
All nations shall glorify thy name. Pf. lxxxvi. 9.
Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.
This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end; and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver.

Tillotson.
3. To praise; to honour; to extol.
Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Speiser on Ireland.
No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall,
Some odoriferous thing or medicinal. Dome.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.
If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

John xiii. 32.
Whom he justified, them he also glorified.

Rom. viii. 30.
The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy.

Pearson.
The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, resume its body again in a glorified manner.

Styliffe's Parergon.

GLORIOUS, adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorious, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world.

Daniel iii. 22.
He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendor of his celestial body, still made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge.

Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,
Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;
It over thee thy glorious foe prevails,
He now defends the cause that once was thine.

Prior.
Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Addison's Cato.
She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those who have fought the good fight.

Law.
If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness.

Law.
GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryden's Dufres.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.

Pope.
GLORY. n. f. [glorie, French; gloria, Latin.

Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glorie.]

1. Praise paid in adoration. Luke ii. 14.
Glory to God in the highest.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory.

Psalms lxxiii. 24.
Then enter into glory, and resume

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intreat God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

Law.
3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.
Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.
And with that word and warning foon was dight,

Each soldier longing for near coming glory.

Fairfax.
Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,

There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea. Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these. Matt. vi. 29.

Treated to ill, chas'd from your throne,
Returning, you adorn the town;

And with a brave revenge do show
Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;
The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky.

Pope's Winter.
From opening skies may streaming glories shine,
And founts embrace thee with a love like mine.

Pope.
6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

South's Sermons.
A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.

Collier of the Asper.
7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end.

Wisd. xiv. 14.

On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto.

Sidney.
TO GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Lat.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorifying when he had hapened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof, and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;

For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorifying is not good. 1 Cor. v. 6.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,
While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,

And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height.

Addison's Cam.
This title of Freeholder is what I most glory in,

and what most effectually calls to mind the happiness of that government under which I live.

Addison's Freeholder.
If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity.

Clarke.
TO GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Illustr.

TO GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to collogue. Illustr.

GLOSS. n. f. [glossa; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explained, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;

'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie.

Davies.
Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right.

Howell.
All this without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment.

Hudibras.
In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.
They give the scandal, and the wife discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn.

Dryden.
Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method.

Baker on Learning.
Indentures, covenants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far

Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,

Whose glittering gloss, dark'ned with filthy dust.

Spenser.
You are a sectary,
That's the plain truth: your painted gloss

discovers,
To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glosses. Shakespeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Eachus.

Weeds

Weeds that the wind did tose

The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss;

Like that of oil. Chapman's Iliads.

It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, fields, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the Spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them.

Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Poor painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin;
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit.

Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit

To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare, H. VI.

The common gloss

Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS, v. n. [glosser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy bands,
By priestly glossing on the gods' commands.

Dryden's Fables.

2. To make fly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra serv'd to well.

Prior.

To GLOSS, v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause.

Phillips's Briton.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave.

Dryden's Pers.

GLOSSARY, n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire,
Fr.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delatum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacra dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries.

Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSATOR, n. f. [glossateur, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER, n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS, n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER, n. f. [γλωσσογραφία and γλῶσσα.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY, n. f. [γλωσσογραφία and γλῶσσα.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY, adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place: he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-camblet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;

His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden, Virg.

GLOVE, n. f. [glope, Saxon, from kl. f. f. f., Dan-nish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i'th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,

Some could not stay their gloves to find. Dryden.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE, v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

My limbs,

Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'nier of transpiring balm;

So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glov'd. Cleveland.

GLOVER, n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a glover's paring knife? Shakespeare, Mer. Wives of Windsor.

To GLOUT, v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks,

Where, glouting round her rock, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with fullen spight, the fury shook
Her clotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW, v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloym, Dut.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But fithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,

I will reveal what ye so much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,

That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front.

Shakespeare's Anthony and Cleopatra.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocence, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakewill.

Not all parts alike, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milt.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows.

Addison's Ovid.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow.

Smith.

Fires that glow,

Shrieks of woe. Pope.

3. To feel the heat of body.

Did not his temples glow

In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?

Addison's Cato.

The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands.

Gay.

4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.

With smiles that glow'd

Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.

Clad in a gown that glows with tyrian rays.

Dryden.

A malicious joy,

Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;

Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,

Amidst the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.

Like the ethereal glow'd the green expanse. Swage.

Fair ideas flow,

Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow. Pope.

Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,

Can move the god. Pope.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

Here clearer stars glow round the frozen poe. Pope.

5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.

You strive in vain

To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison's Cato.

For'd compliments and formal bows
Will shew the just above neglect:

The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.

Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.

Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, in spirit ev'ry grace,

Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

With furies surrounded,

Despairing, confounded,

He trembles, he glows,

Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.

So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others' woe. Pope.

To praise is always hard,

When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.

6. To rage or burn as a passion.

A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.

Dryden.

When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;

It glows, and with a fullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell.

To GLOW, v. a. To make hot so as to shine.

Not in use.

On each side her

Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakespeare.

GLOW, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Shining heat.

2. Vehemence of passion.

3. Brightness or vividness of colour.

The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain. Shakespeare.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tin-

GLOWWORM, n. f. [glow and worm.] A small creeping insect with a luminous tail.

The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes. Shakespeare.

The glowworm shews the matten to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire. Shakespeare, Hamlet.

A great light downeth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm.

Bacon's Natural History.

The man, who first upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found

A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels shone;

He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Inform'd, he threw the worthless worm away. Waller.

To GLOZE, v. n. [glepan; Saxon.]

1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.

Man will hearken to his glazing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So glaz'd the tempter, and his poem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way. Milton.

5 C 2

GLU

A false glossing parasite would call his foolhardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.

Now for a glossing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.

2. To comment. This should be gloss.
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloss
To be the realm of France. Shakespeare's Henry V.
GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]
3. Flattery; insinuation.
Now to plain dealing; lay these glosses by.

2. Specious showing; gloss. Not used.
Precious couches full oft are shak'd with a fever;
If then a bodily evil in a bodily gloss be not hidden,
Shall such morning dew be an ease to the heat of love's fire?

GLOZEN. n. f. [from gloss.] A flatterer.
GLUE. n. f. [glu, French; gluten, Latin; glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.

Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthly and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Natural History.
The driest and most transparent glue is the best.

To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue.
To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To join with a viscous cement.

I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glue'd many friends to thee.

Whofo teacheth a fool is as one that *glue*th a potsherd together.

The custom of crowning the Holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of stars, *glue*d to the canvass over the head of the figure.

Most wounds, if kept clean, and from the air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm.

2. To hold together.
The parts of homogeneous hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are *glue*d together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing.

3. To join; to unite; to invocate.
Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lusts and pleasures; and when they are once *glue*d to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out.

Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts, do debase mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things.

She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glue'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd.

I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.

GLUEBOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.

GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.

GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting glum.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.

Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well, what then?

To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutit, Lat. to swallow; γλῦζω.]

1. To swallow; to devour.
"Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to fate; to disgust.

The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers.

Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites.

What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils.

No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end.

I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new.

3. To feast or delight even to satiety.
With death's carcass glut the grave.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Torn from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.

A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole.

4. To overfill; to load.
He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once.

5. To saturate.
The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it.

GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Disgorged foul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thunderbolts, and hail
Of iron globes.

2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.
So death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his rav'nous maw.

Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights.

A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement.

3. More than enough; overmuch.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits of channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutin-ux, French; from glutit, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects: the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling into shape and members.

Next this marble venom'd feat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat.

Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glutton, French; from glutit, Lat. to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.
The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked.

Through Macer's gullet she runs down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follow's Bibb's endless draught.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.
The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal arts so impiously employ.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.] To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

The sun, which once did shine alone,

Hung down his head, and with'd for night,

When he beheld twelve suns for one

Going about the world, and giving light. Herbert.

This seen, the rest at awful distance stood,

As if they had been there as servants set,

To stay or to go on, as he thought good,

And not pursue, but wait on his retreat.

Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Turn not children going, till you have given them all the satisfaction they are capable of.

Locke.

History only acquaints us that his fleet went up the Elbe, he having carried his arms as far as that river. Arbutnot.

The last advice I give you relates to your behaviour when you are going to be hanged, which,

either for robbing your master, for housebreaking, or going upon the highway, may very probably be your lot. Swift's Directions to the Footman.

Those who come for gold will go off with pewter and brass, rather than return empty. Swift.

sideration of the Divine Providence.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

I hope, by going over all these particulars, you may receive some tolerable satisfaction about this great subject. South.

If we go over the laws of christianity, we shall find that, excepting a few particulars, they enjoin

the same things, only they have made our duty

more clear and certain. Tillotson.

In their primary qualities we can go but a very little way. Locke.

I go over some parts of this argument again, and enlarge a little more upon them. Locke.

They are not able all their life-time to reckon, or regularly go over any moderate series of numbers. Locke.

14. To take any road.

I will go along by the highway; I will neither turn to the right hand, nor to the left.

his own way and his own pace. Temple.

15. To march in a hostile or warlike manner.

You were advis'd his flesh was capable

Of wounds and fears, and that his forward spirit

Would lift him where most trade of danger rang'd;

Yet did you say go forth. Shaksp. Henry IV.

We be not able to go up against the people;

for they are stronger than we. Numb. xiii. 31.

Let us go down after the Philistines by night, and spoil them until the morning light.

Thou art able to go against this Philistine to fight with him.

The remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles as a lion among the beasts of the forest: who, if he go through, both treadeth down and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

To change state or opinion for better or worse.

We will not hearken to the king's words to go from our religion.

The regard of the publick state, in so great a danger, made all those goodly things, which went so to wreck, to be lightly accounted of in comparison of their lives and liberty.

They look upon men and matters with an evil eye; and are best pleased when things go backward, which is the worst property of a servant of a prince or state.

All goes to ruin, they themselves contrive To rob the honey, and subvert the hive.

Landed men, by their providence and good husbandry, accommodating their expences to their income, keep themselves from going backwards in the world.

Cato, we all go into your opinion.

To apply one's self. Seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, he went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood.

Because this atheist goes mechanically to work, he will not offer to affirm that all the parts of the embryo could, according to his explication, be formed at a time.

To have recourse to. Dare any of you, having a matter against another, go to law before the unjust, and not before the fairs.

To be about to do. So extraordinary an example, in so degenerate an age, deserves for the rarity, and, I was going to say, for the incredibility of it, the attestation of all that knew him, and considered his worth.

To shift; to pass life not quite well. Every goldsmith, eager to engross to himself as much as he could, was content to pay high for it, rather than go without.

Cloaths they must have; but if they speak for this stuff, or that colour, they should be sure to go without it.

To decline; to tend towards death or ruin. This sense is only in the participles going and gone.

He is far gone, and, truly, in my youth, I suffer'd much extremity for love.

Very near this.

To be in party or design. They with the vanquish'd prince and party go,

And leave their temples empty to the foe.

To escape. Timotheus himself fell into the hands of Dositheus and Sospater, whom he besought with much craft to let him go with his life.

To tend to any act. There be some women, Silviu, had they mark'd him

In parcels as I did, would have gone near To fall in love with him.

To be uttered. His disciples personally appeared among them, and ascertained the report which had gone abroad concerning a life so full of miracles.

To be talked of; to be known. It has the greatest town in the island that goes under the name of Ano Caprea, and is in several places covered with a very fruitful soil.

To pass; to be received. Because a fellow of my acquaintance set forth her praises in verse, I will only repeat them, and spare my own tongue, since she goes for a woman.

And the man went among men for an old man in the days of Saul.

A kind imagination makes a bold man have vigour and enterprize in his air and motion: it stamps value upon his face, and tells the people he is to go for so much.

Clipping should be finally stopped, and the money which remains should go according to its true value.

To move by mechanism. This pope is decrepid, and the bell goes for him.

Clocks will go as they are set; but man, Irregular man's never constant, never certain.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none Go just alike, yet each believes his own.

To be in motion from whatever cause. The wayward sisters hand in hand, Posters of the sea and land,

Thus do go about, about.

Clit and washed money goes about, when the entire and weighty lies hoarded up.

To move in any direction. Doctor, he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions.

Shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

To flow; to pass; to have a course. The god I am, whose yellow water flows Around these fields, and fattens as it goes,

Tyber my name.

To have any tendency. Athenians, know Against right reasons all your counsels go;

This is not fair, nor profitable that, Nor t'other question proper for debate.

To be in a state of compact or partnership. As a lion was bestriding an ox that he had newly plucked down, a robber passing by cried out to him, half shares: you would go your snip, says the lion, if you were not so forward to be your own carver.

There was a hunting match agreed upon betwixt a lion, an ass, and a fox, and they were to go equal shares in the booty.

To be regulated by any method; to proceed upon principles. Where the multitude beareth sway, laws that shall tend to the preservation of that state must make common smaller offices to go by lot, for fear of strife and divisions likely to arise.

We are to go by another measure. The principles I there went on, I see no reason to alter.

The reasons that they went upon were very specious and probable.

To be pregnant. Great bellied women, That had not half a week to go.

The fruit she goes with, I pray that it good time and life may find.

Of living creatures some are a longer time in the womb, and some shorter: women go commonly nine months, the cow and the ewe about six months.

Some do go with their young to the sixth part of a year, or two over or under, that is, about six or nine weeks: and the whelps of these see not till twelve days.

And now with second hopes she goes, And calls Lucina to her throws.

To pass; not to remain. She began to afflict him, and his strength went from him,

When our merchants have brought them, if our commodities will not be enough, our money must go to pay for them.

To pass, or be loosed; not to be retained. Then he lets me go, And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd, He seem'd to find his way without his eyes.

Let go the hand of that arch heretic.

To be expended. Scholars are close and frugal of their words, and not willing to let any go for ornament, if they will not serve for use.

To be in order of time or place. We must enquire far her what is the connexion of that sentence with those that go before it, and those which follow it.

To reach or be extended to any degree. Can another man perceive that I am conscious of any thing, when I perceive it not myself? No man's knowledge here can go beyond his experience.

To extend to consequences. It is not one master that either directs or takes notice of these: it goes a great way barely to permit them.

To reach by effects. Considering the cheapness, so much money might go farther than a sum ten times greater could do now.

To extend in meaning. His amorous expressions go no further than virtue may allow.

To spread; to be dispersed; to reach. Whose flesh, torn off by lumps, the ravenous foe In morsels cut, to make it farther go.

To have influence; to be of weight; to be of value. I had another reason to decline it, that ever uses to go far with me upon all new inventions or experiments; which is, that the best trial of them is by time, and observing whether they live or no.

'Tis a rule that goes a great way in the government of a sober man's life, not to put any thing to hazard that may be secured by industry, consideration, or circumspection.

Whatever appears against their prevailing vice goes for nothing, being either not applied, or passing for libel and slander.

To be rated one with another; to be considered with regard to greater or less worth. I think, as the world goes, he was a good sort of man enough.

To contribute; to conduce; to concur; to be an ingredient. The medicines which go to the ointments are so strong, that, if they were used inwards, they would kill those that use them.

More parts of the greater wheels go to the making one part of their lines.

There goes a great many qualifications to the completing this relation: there is no small share of honour and conscience and sufficiency required.

I give the sex their revenge, by laying together the many vicious characters that prevail in the male world, and shewing the different ingredients that go to the making up of such different humours and constitutions.

Something better and greater than high birth and quality must go toward acquiring those demonstrations of publick esteem and love.

To fall out, or terminate; to succeed. Your strong possession much more than your right,

Or else it must go wrong with you and me.

Howe'er the business goes, you have made fault I th' boldness of your speech.

I will send to thy father, and they shall declare unto him how things go with thee.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory shall go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the grofs, it would go on the other side.

It has been the constant observation of all, that if a minister had a cause depending in the court, it was ten to one but it went against him.

At the time of the prince's landing, the father, easily easily foreseeing how things would go, went over, like many others, to the prince. Swift.

Whether the cause goes for me or against me, you must pay me the reward. Watts's Logick.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was us'd to follow, is now gone over to money. Swift.

65. To Go out. To go upon any expedition. You need not have prick'd me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakspeare's Henry V.

66. To Go out. To be extinguished. Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out, With titles blown from adulation? Shakspeare's Henry V.

Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Natural History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chymist's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about; And all her early fires again go out. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier of Friendship.

My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave, And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addison's Cato.

And at her felt approach and secret might, Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope's Dunciad.

67. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.

If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not lost all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South's Sermons.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money, in order to go through their part of the expense. Addison on the War.

68. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo. I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbutnot.

69. To Go upon. To take as a principle. This supposition I have gone upon through those papers. Addison.

70. The senses of this word are very indistinct: its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come. This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow; Let me be clear of thee. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

My favour is not bought with words like these: Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale. Rowe.

Go-by. n. f. Delusion; artifice; circumvention; over-reach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go-by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect. Collier on Pride.

Go-cart. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are inclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding, When members knit, and legs grow stronger, Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

*Go*ad. n. f. [gad, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Of in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To *Go*ad. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.

2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate; to drive forward.

Most dangerous Is that temptation, that doth goad us on To sin in loving virtue. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

Goad-d with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues. Shakspeare's All's well that ends well.

Of all that breathes the various progeny, Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryden.

*Go*al. n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race; the point marked out to which racers run.

GOB

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.
And the slope fun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.
2. The starting post.
Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.
3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

GOAR. n. f. [goror, Welsh.] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [zax, Saxon and Scottish.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goats, and slips of yew. Shaksp. Macb.
We Cyclops care not for your goat fed Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better farre. Chapman.

You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their paper-mills upon goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peachum.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,
Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heaven, and duty rais'd the pious maid. Greecb.

GOATBEARD. n. f. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOATCHAFFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOATHERD. n. f. [zax and hyrd, Saxon, a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not thilk same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themself doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastorals.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment,
And the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

GOATMARKJOKAM. n. f. The same with GOATSBEARD.

GOATSMILK. n. f. [goat and milk.] This is more properly two words.

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary. Wifeman's Surgery.

GOATMILKER. n. f. [goat and milker.] A kind of owl, so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOAT'S RUE. n. f. [galea.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.]

Then fill'd two goatskins, with her hands divine;
With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope's Odyssey.

GOATSTHORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOATISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality: as, rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star. Shaksp. King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal. More against Atheism.

GOB. n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do'st think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money? L'Estrange.

GOBBET. n. f. [gote, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw,
A flood of poison, horrible and black,
Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw. Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great,
And like ambitious Sylla overgorg'd
With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart. Shaksp. Henry VI.

The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace. Sundys's Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den,
Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd
With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd. Adison.

To GOBBET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a ki'e powdering upon them, and goblets up both together. L'Estrange.

To GOBBLE. v. a. [gaber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them. L'Estrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store;
Fat turkies gobbling at the door.

The time too precious now to waste,
And supper gobbled up in haste,
Again afresh to cards they run. Swift.

GOBBLER. n. f. [from goble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO-BETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me; I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

GOBLET. n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp. Richard II.

We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd;
But free from surfeits our repose is found. Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a cheerful draught;
Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought. Dryden.

GOBLIN. n. f. [French; gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elze and goblin is G-elph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elze is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eliff Eiston, are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named Gobaldi, from which gobelin might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell!

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd,
Art thou that traitor angel? Milton's Par. Lost.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark. Lock.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfinel, who overcame
The wicked goblins in bloody field;
But Elfant was of most renowned fame,
Who of all crystal did Panthea build. Spenser.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints
With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews
With aged cramps. Shaksp. Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire,
While well attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn goes the goblin story round. Thomson.

GOD. n. f. [gods, Saxon, which likewise signifies god. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonic dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. John, iv. 24.

God above

Deal between thee and me. Shaksp. Macbeth.

All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all. Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy. Grew's Cosmog.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. Exod. xxii. 20.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods,
They kill us for their sport. Shaksp. K. Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing North, and Hyperborean seas,
And Scythian colds, and Thracia's Winter coast,
Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most. Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly. Phil. iii.

I am not Licio,
But one that seems to live in this disguise,
For such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shaksp. To God. v. a.

To GOB. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man,
Lov'd me above the measure of a father;
Nay, godded me, indeed. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

GOCHILD. n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a Christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER. n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor in baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DDESS. n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddess, hear a father!

A woman I forswore; but I will prove,
Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthy, thou a heavenly love. Shaksp. I long have waited in the temple nigh,

Built to the gracious goddess's Clemency;
But reverence thou the power. Dryden's Fables.

From his feat the goddess born arose,
And thus undaunted spoke. Dryden's Fables.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself
Among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished
By her graceful stature and superior beauty. Add.

Modesty with-held the goddess's train. Pope's Ode.

GO'DDESS-LIKE. adj. [goddess and like.] Resembling a goddess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard?
A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd. Pope's Odyssey.

GO'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child. Bacon's Henry VII.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transcribed from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator. Hammond.

GO'DHEAD. n. f. [from god.]

1. God

GOD

G O D

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

Be content;

Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

At the holy mount

Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne

Of godheads, fix'd for ever firm and sure,

The filial pow'r arriv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

So may thy godhead be confest,

So the returning year be blest. Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddess.

Were your godheads to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods. Shakespeare's Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place,

The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown. Dryden's Æneid.

Go'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God: atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both godless, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known. Hooker.

That godless crew

Rebellious. Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes

Of godless men, and of rebellious times,

Him his ungrateful country sent, Their best Camillus, into banishment. Dryden.

Go'DLIKE. adj. [from god and like.] Divine; resembling a divinity; supremely excellent.

Thus Adam his illustrious guest befought, And thus the godlike angels answer'd mild. Milt.

Musing and much revolving in his breast, How best the mighty work he might begin Of Saviour to mankind, and which way first Publish his godlike office now mature. Milton.

That price shall be so wise and godlike, as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection and encouragement to the honest industry of mankind. Locke.

Go'DLING. n. f. [from god.] A little divinity; a diminutive god.

Thy puny godlings of inferior race, Whose humble statues are content with brags. Dryden's Juvenal.

Go'DLINESS. n. f. [from godly.]

1. Piety to God.

2. General observance of all the duties prescribed by religion.

Virtue and godliness of life are required at the hands of the minister of God. Hooker.

Go'DLY. adj. [from god.]

1. Pious towards God.

Grant that we may hereafter live a godly, righteous, and sober life. Common Prayer.

2. Good; righteous; religious.

Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth, for the faithful fail among the children of men. Psalms xii. 1.

The same church is really holy in this world, in relation to all godly persons contained in it, by a real infused sanctity. Pearson.

Go'DLY. adv. Piously; righteously. By analogy it should be godlily, but the repetition of the syllable is too harsh.

The apostle St. Paul teacheth, that every one that will live godly in Christ Jesus must suffer persecution. Hooker.

Go'DLYHEAD. n. f. [from godly.] Goodness; righteousness. An old word.

For this, and many more such outrage,

I crave your godlyhead to assuage The rancorous rigour of his might. Spenser.

3. Departure.

Thy going is not lonely; with thee goes Thy husband; him to follow thou art bound. Milton.

Go'LA. n. f. The same with CYMATIUM.

In a cornice the gola, or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble show. Spett.

GOLD. n. f. [from golep, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh.] It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geol, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gellen, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word geli, for money. Peacham on Drav.

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Feffib.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, pliancy or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch, To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakespeare's Richard III.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold fraught vessel, which mad tempests beat,

He fees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden's Tyrannic Lover.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce, Although I did admit it as a motive The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakespeare's Henry V.

Thou that so stoutly hadst resisted me, Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold:

For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσὸν ἀργύρου; and animamque more sue aureos educti in astra. Horace.

The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold, A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakespeare's Henry V.

GOLD of Pleasure. n. f. [from golum.] A plant.

Go'LDREATER. n. f. [from gold and beat.] One whose occupation is to beat or foliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest coined gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

GOLDBEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intestine rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gilliflowers blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeater's skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Go'LDBOUND. adj. [from gold and bound.] Encompassed with gold.

Thy air, Thou other goldbound brow, is like the first. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Go'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

O would to God that the inclusive verge Of golden metal, that must round my brow, Were red hot steel to fear me to the brain. Shakespeare's Richard III.

Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed, Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed, In golden armour glorious to behold; The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not To those fresh morning drops upon the rose; Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakespeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born That wear a golden sorrow. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Cryshaw.

VOL. I. N° 20. 5 D To

To her hard yoke you must hereafter bow,
How'er she shines all golden to you now. Dryden.
And see the guardian angels of the good,
Reclining foit on many a golden cloud. Rowe.

3. Yellow; of the colour of gold.
Golden rusteting hath a gold coloured coat under a russet hair, and its flesh of a yellow colour. Mortimer.

4. Excellent; valuable.

I have bought
Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest gloses,
Not cast aside so soon. Shakspeare. Macbeth.

That verse which they commonly call golden, has two substantives and two adjectives, with a verb betwixt them to keep the peace. Dryden.

Thence arises that golden rule of dealing with others as we would have others deal with us. Watts's Logick.

5. Happy; resembling the age of gold.
Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world. Shakspeare.

port speaks goldenly of his profit. Shakspeare's As you like it.

GO'LDFINCH. n. f. [goldfinch, Saxon.] A singing bird, so named from his golden colour. This is called in Staffordshire a proud taylor.

Of singing birds they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, Canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side. Dryden.

GO'LDFINDER. n. f. [gold and find.] One who finds gold. A term ludicrously applied to those that empty jakes.

His empty paunch that he might fill,
He suck'd his vittels through a quill;
Untouch'd it pass'd between his grinders,
Or't had been happy for goldfinders. Swift.

GO'LDHAMMER. n. f. A kind of bird. Dict.

GO'LDING. n. f. A sort of apple. Dict.

GO'LDNEY. n. f. A sort of fish, otherwise called

good. Spectator.

A man is no more to be praised upon this account, than because he has a regular pulse and a good digestion. Addison.

Ah, ne'er so dire a thirst of glory boast,
Nor in the critick let the man be lost!

Good nature and good sense must ever join;
To err is human, to forgive, divine. Pope.

2. Proper; fit; convenient; right; not wrong.

Amongst a man's peers a man shall be sure of familiarity, and therefore it is good a little to keep state; amongst a man's inferiors one shall be sure of reverence, and therefore it is good a little to be familiar. Bacon.

If you think good, give Martius leave. Bacon.

It was a good time to comply with the importunity of the gentlemen of Suffex. Clarendon.

5 D 2

Of sons, like one of us is man become,
To know both good and evil, since his taste
Of that defended fruit, but let him boast
His knowledge of good lost, and evil got,
Happier had it fustic'd him to have known
Good by itself, and evil not at all. Milton.
Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise. Milton.

By good, I question not but good, morally to called, bonum bonum, ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum util, or jucundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood, Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good. Dryden.

5. Good placed after bad, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vicious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See Good, adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves. South.

GOR

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and mimpins. Beaumont and Fletcher.
 Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Ful-ham holds. Shakespeare.

GORE. n. f. [gore, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, fanious matter.]

1. Blood effused from the body.
 A grievous wound,
 From which forth gush'd a stream of gore blood thick,
 That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
 And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.
Spenser.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
 Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.
 The bloody fact

Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die, Rolling in dult and gore. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 His horrid beard and knotted tresses stood Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood.
Denham.

To GORE. v. a. [zebejuan, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.
 Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
 For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
 Nor from his larger tusks the forest boar
 Communion takes his brother swine to gore.
Tate's Juvenal.

For arms his men long pikes and jav'lins bore,
 And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle
gore. Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

 He kill'd. Dryden.

He idly butting, feigns
 His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk. Thom. Spring.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.
 There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the fight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver. Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is!
 my gorge rises at it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed. Not in use.

And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
 He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.
Spenser.

To GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up to the throat; to glut; to satiate.
 Being with his presence glutted, gor'd, and full.
Shakespeare.

He that makes his generation messes,
 To gorge his appetite. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.
Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity. Addison.

Nor would his slaughtered army now have lain
 On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
 To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.
Addison's Cato.

The giant, gor'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,
 Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den.
Addison.

2. To swallow: as, the fish has gorged the book.

GO'GED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gor'd lark so far
 Cannot be seen or heard. Shakespeare.

GO'GEOUS. adj. [gorgeous, old French. Skin- ner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
 In such a gorgeous palace! Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

As full of spirit as the month of May,
 And gorgeous as the sun at Midsummer.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

 tidings; euaggelion; seikel, sheal, juach, happy tidings, Erse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the Christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
 Be spread, and flourish where it first begun.
Waller.

All the decrees whereof Scripture treateth are conditionate, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus,
 the condition of the scripture-reprobation. Hamm.

How is a good Christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel!
Bentley.

GOT

2. Divinity; theology.

To GO'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gospellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you so gospell'd
 To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
 Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
Shakespeare.

GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the Papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gospellers have had their golden days,
 Have trodden down our holy Roman faith.
Rowe's Jane Shore.

GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of Autumn. Hammer.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,
 That idles in the wanton Summer air,
 And yet not fall, so light is vanity.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
 Their harnesses of gossamer. Drayton's Nymphid.

The filmy gossamer now flits no more,
 Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore.
Dryden's Virgil.

GO'SSIP. n. f. [from gode and ryb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.
 Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me,
 After so long grief such nativity. Shakespeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips. Darvies on Ireland.

2. A tipping companion.
 And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
 In very likeness of a roasted crab,
 And when she drinks against her lips I bob:
Shakespeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
 And be a gossip at his labours. Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
 The common chat of gossips when they meet.
Dryden.

To GO'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
 Go to a gossip's feast, and gaud with me.
 —With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.
Shakespeare.

His mother was a votress of my order,
 And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
 Full often hath the gossips by my side. Shakespeare.

The market and exchange must be left to their own ways of talking; and gossips not be robbed of their ancient privilege. Locke.

He gives himself up to an idle gossiping conversation. Larri.

2. To be a pot-companion.
 Nor met with fortune, other than at feast,
 Full warm of blood, of mirth of gossiping.
Shakespeare's King John.

GO'SSIPRED. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]

Gossipred or compatermy, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.
Darvies on Ireland.

GO'STING. n. f. [rubia.] An herb. Ainsworth.

GOT. pret. [from the verb get.]

Titus Lartius writes, they fought together; but Aufidius got off. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
 Though foul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

These regions and this realm my wars have got;
 This mournful empire is the loser's lot.

Tuff.

To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French; gubernare, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.

This inconvenience is more hard to be redressed in the governor than the governed; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.

Spenser on Ireland.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then It grows impossible to govern men.

Waller.

2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.

I am at present against war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and naughty spirits as you are, govern all things in times of peace.

Davenant.

The chief point, which he is to carry always in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his counsels, designs, and actions.

Atterbury.

3. To manage; to restrain.

Go after her, she's desperate, govern her.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

To GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority; to behave with haughtiness.

By that rule, Your wicked atoms may be working now To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.

Dryden.

GO'VERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule; obedient; manageable.

The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.

Locke.

GO'VERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]

1. Government; rule; management.

Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas.

1 Maccabees, ix. 31.

2. Controll, as that of a guardian.

Me he knew not, neither his own ill, 'Till through wife handling, and fair governance, I him recured to a better will.

Spenser.

What! shall king Henry be a pupil still, Under the surly Gloster's governance?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.

He liketh to fall into mischance That is regardless of his governance. Spens. Muirp.

More against Atheism.

GO'VERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement, French.]

1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.

There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.

Templ.

No government can do any act to limit itself: the supreme legislative power cannot make itself not to be absolute.

Leff.

2. An established state of legal authority.

There they shall find

Their government, and their great senate chuse Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws ordained.

Milton.

While he survives, in concord and content The commons live, by no division rent;

But the great monarch's death dissolves the government.

Dryden.

Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Addison.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.

Swift.

GO'VERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]

1. One who has the supreme direction

It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governor of the world by providence, all are partakers.

Hooker.

They beget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governor of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.

Bentley.

2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.

For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the governor among the nations.

Psalms xxii. 28.

The magistrate cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the minister, if so disposed, can urge disobedience: as, for instance if my governor should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or forfeit my estate; and the minister steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and ruin my soul, if I obey that command, 'tis easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

Smith.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.

To you, lord governor,

Remains the censure of this hellish villain.

Shakespeare's Othello.

4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.

To Eltam will I, where the young king is, Being ordain'd his special governor;

And for his safety there I'll best devise.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The great work of a governor is to fashion the carriage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.

Locke.

During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governors and courtiers.

Legisl.

of manner; dignity with beauty.

His neck, his hands, his shoulders, and his breast,
Did next in gracefulness and beauty stand

To breathing figures. Dryden's Ovid.

He executed with so much gracefulness and beauty, that he alone got money and reputation.

Dryden's Darius.

There is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and fobriety of age be wanting. Dryden's Ovid, Pref.

If hearers are amaz'd from whence

Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,

Which, though her modesty would shroud,

Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;

While gracefulness its art conceals,

And yet through ev'ry motion steals. Swift.

GRACELESS. adj. [from grace.] Void of grace;
wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.

This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady dear. Spenser.

Whose hap shall be to have her,

Will not so graceless be, to be ingrate. Shakespeare.

In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. L'Estrange.

Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way,

Between the graceless villain and his prey. Dryden.

had been alive. Willm.

GRADUAL. adj. [graduel, French.] Proceeding by degrees; advancing step by step; from one stage to another.

Nobler birth

Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all form'd up in man. Milton.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as, that, from great things and persons should grow greater, 'till at length, by many steps and accents they come to be at greatest. Smith.

GRADUAL. n. f. [gradus, Latin.] An order of steps.

Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,
The pavement kiss'd, and thus the saint implor'd.
Dryden.

GRADUALITY. n. f. [from gradual.] Regular progression.

This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light. Brown.

GRADUALLY. adv. [from gradual.]

1. By degrees; in regular progression.

When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton's Opticks.

The author of our being weans us gradually from our foulness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it. Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbutnot.

graduate.]

1. Regular progression by succession of degrees.
The graduation of the parts of the universe is likewise necessary to the perfection of the whole. Grew.

2. Improvement; exaltation of qualities.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguish'd in oyl of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fasten'd in a wall. Brown.

3. The act of conferring academical degrees.

GRAFT. n. f. A ditch; a moat. See GRAVE.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet
the

the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep.

GRAFF. } n. f. [greffe, French.] A small branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cynon.

God gave unto man all kind of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves.

'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see
With infolence invade a foreign tree. Dryd. Virg.

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heal the sooner.

Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives.

TO GRAFF. } v. a. [greffer, French.]

1. To insert a cynon or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graff you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

With his pruning hook disjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graff more happy in their stead. Dryden.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident graffed upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graff my love immortal on thy fame.

TO GRAFT. v. n. To practice infition.

In March is good graffing the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the East do not blow:

From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For graffing and cropping is very good time. Tusser.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graff, not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graff but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few.

GRAFTER. n. f. [from graff or graff.] One who propagates fruit by graffing.

I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graff the same year in which the infition is made.

GRAIL. n. f. [from grail, Fr.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unweeting was,
And lying down upon the sandy grails,

Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glafs. Spens.

GRAIN. n. f. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

Many of the ears being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty.

2. Corn.

As it ebbs, the seedsmen
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

'Tis a rich foil, I grant you; but often covered with weeds than grain.

3. The seed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.

Thou exist'st on many thousand grains

That issue out of duft. Shakefp. Meaf. for Meaf.

By intelligence

And proofs as clear as founts in July, when We fee each grain of gravel. Shakefp. Hen. VIII.

5. The smallest weight, of which in phyfick twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty four make a pennyweight; a grain so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value. Holyday.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which arifeth, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces and pounds.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing feverally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weighing only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water.

His brain

Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance.

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving.

I would always give some grains of allowance to the sacred science of theology.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

How the red roses flush up in her cheeks,
And the pure snow with goodly vermil stain,
Like crimfon dy'd in grain.

Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd,
Livelier than melibæan, or the grain
Of farra, worn by kings and heroes old.

Come, pensive nun, devout and pure,

All in a robe of darkeft grain,
Flowing with majestic train.

The third, his feet
Shadow'd from either heel with feather'd mail,
Sky-tinctur'd grain!

12. Temper; disposition; inclination; humour from the direction of fibres.

Your minds, preoccupied with what
You rather must do than with what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him conful.

Quoth Hudibras, it is in vain,
I see, to argue 'gainst the grain.

Old clients, weary'd out with fruitless care,
Dismiss their hopes of eating, and despair;
Though much against the grain, forc'd to retire,
Buy roots for supper, and provide a fire.

13. The art; the bottom.

The one being tractable and mild, the other stiff and impatient of a superior, they lived but in cunning concord, as brothers glued together, but not united in grain.

14. The form of a surface with regard to roughness and smoothness.

The smaller the particles of cutting substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glafs until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glafs no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by breaking its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible.

GRAINED. adj. [from grain.] Rough; made less smooth.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
Yet hath my night of life some memory.

We make a countryman dumb, whom we will not allow to speak but by the rules of grammar.

Men, speaking language according to the grammar rules of that language, do yet speak improperly of things.

2. Propriety or justness of speech; speech according to grammar.

Varium & mutabile semper femina, is the sharpest satire that ever was made on woman; for the adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make them grammar.

3. The book that treats of the various relations of words to one another.

VOL. I. N° 20. 5 E GRAIN

GRAMMAR School. n. f. A school in which the learned languages are grammatically taught. Thou hast most traitorously corrupted the youth of the realm in erecting a grammar school.

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

The ordinary way of learning Latin in a grammar school I cannot encourage.

GRAMMARIAN. n. f. [grammairien, Fr. from grammar.] One who teaches grammar; a philologist.

Many disputes the ambiguous nature of letters hath created among the grammarians.

Holder's Elements of Speech.

They who have called him the torture of grammarians, might also have called him the plague of translators.

GRAMMATICAL. adj. [grammatical, Fr. grammaticus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to grammar.

The beauty of virtue still being set before their eyes, and that taught them with far more diligent care than grammatical rules.

I shall take the number of consonants, not from the grammatical alphabets of any language, but from the diversity of sounds framed by single articulations with appulse.

2. Taught by grammar.

They seldom know more than the grammatical construction, unless born with a poetical genius.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

GRAMMATICALLY. adv. [from grammatical.] According to the rules or science of grammar.

When a sentence is distinguished into the nouns, the verbs, pronouns, adverbs, and other particles of speech which compose it, then it is said to be analysed grammatically.

As grammar teacheth us to speak properly, so it is the part of rhetoric to instruct how to do it elegantly, by adding beauty to that language that before was naked and grammatically true.

Baker on Learning.

GRAMMATICASTER. n. f. [Latin.] A mean verbal pedant; a low grammarian.

I have not vexed language with the doubts, the remark, and eternal triflings of the French grammaticasters.

One was saying that his great grandfather, and grandfather, and father died at sea: said another, that heard him, an' I were as you, I would never come at sea. Why, faith he, where did your great grandfather, and grandfather, and father die?

He answered, where but in their beds? He answered, an' I were as you, I would never come in bed.

Our grandchildren will see a few rags hung up in Westminster-hall, which cost an hundred millions, whereof they are paying the arrears, and boast that their grandfathers were rich and great.

GRANDFICK. adj. [grandis and facio, Latin.] Making great.

GRANDINOUS. adj. [grando, Latin.] Full of hail; consisting of hail.

GRANDITY. n. f. [from grandis, Latin.] Greatness; grandeur; magnificence. An old word.

Our poets excel in grandity and gravity, smoothness and property, in quickness and briefness.

GRANDMOTHER. n. f. [grand and mother.] The father's or mother's mother.

Thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice.

1. Tim. i. 5.

GRANDSIRE. n. f. [grand and sire.]

1. Grandfather.

Think'st thou, that I will leave my kingly throne Wherein my grandsire and my father sat?

Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Thy grandsire, and his brother, to whom fame Gave, from two conquer'd parts o' th' world, their name.

The wreaths his grandsire knew to reap By active toil and military sweat.

2. Any ancestor, poetically.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within, Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?

Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.

Above the portal, carved in cedar wood, Plac'd in their ranks, their godlike grandfathers stood.

So mimick ancient wits at best, As apes our grandfathers in their doublets drest.

GRANDSON. n. f. [grand and son.] The son of a son or daughter.

Almighty Jove augment your wealthy store, Give much to you, and to his grandsons more.

Grandfathers in private families are not much observed to have great influence on their grandsons, and, I believe, they have much less among princes.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana.

The loose unletter'd hinds, When for their teeming flocks and granges full In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, whether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate: and of this sort were their granges and priories.

GRANITE. n. f. [granit, French, from granum, Lat. because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, rudely compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moorstone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of public buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish.

Alabaster, marble of divers colours, both simple and mixed, the opulites, porphyry, and the granite.

There are still great pillars of granite, and other fragments of this ancient temple.

GRANIVOROUS. adj. [granum and voro, Latin.] Eating grain; living upon grain.

Granivorous birds, as a crane, upon the first peck of their bills, can distinguish the qualities of hard bodies, which the sense of men discerns not without mastication.

Panick affords a soft demulcent nourishment, both for granivorous birds and mankind.

GRANNAM. n. f. [for grandam.] Grandmother. Only used in burlesque works.

Of my kind grannam told me, Tim, take warning.

TO GRANT. v. a. [from garantir, French, guarantir and Skinner; perhaps, as Minsheu thinks, from gratuito, or rather from gratia or gratificor.]

1. To admit that which is not yet proved; to allow; to yield; to concede.

They gather out of Scripture general rules to be followed in making laws; and so, in effect, they plainly grant, that we ourselves may lawfully make laws for the church.

I take it for granted, that though the Greek word which we translate faints, be in itself as applicable to things as persons; yet in this article it signifieth not holy things, but holy ones.

Grant that the fates have firm'd, by their decree, The Trojan race to reign in Italy. Dryden's Æneid.

Suppose, which yet I grant not, thy desire A moment elder than my rival fire,

Can chance of seeing first thy title prove? Dryden. If he be one indifferent as to the present rebellion, they may take it for granted his complaint is the rage of a disappointed man.

2. To bestow something which cannot be claimed of right.

The God of Israel grant thee thy petition that thou hast asked of him.

Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life.

Didst thou not kill this king? — I grant ye.

—Do'ft grant me, hedgehog? then grant me too, Thou may'ft be damned for that wicked deed.

He heard, and granted half his prayer; The rest the winds dispers'd.

GRANT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of granting or bestowing.

2. The thing granted; a gift; a boon.

Courtiers juggle for a grant, And when they break their friendship plead their want.

3. [In law.] A gift in writing of such a thing as cannot aptly be passed or conveyed by word only; as rent, reversions, services, advowsons in gross, common in gross, tithes, &c. or made by such persons as cannot give but by deed, as the king, and all bodies politic; which differences he often in speech neglected, and then is taken generally for every gift whatsoever, made of any thing by any person; and he that granteth is named the grantor, and he to whom it is made the grantee. A thing is said to be in grant which cannot be assigned without deed.

All the land is the queen's, unless there be some grant of any part thereof, to be shewed from her majesty.

Not only the laws of this kingdom, but of other places, and the Roman laws, provide that the prince should not be deceived in his grants.

4. Concession; admission of something in dispute.

But of this so large a grant, we are content not to take advantage.

This grant destroys all you have urg'd before.

That grave awfulness, as in your best breed of mattives, or elegance and prettiness, as in your lesser dogs, are modes of beauty. More against Aths.

Even the grave and serious characters are distinguished by their several sorts of gravity.

Dryden's Fables, Preface.

Youth on silent wings is flown;

Graver years come rolling on.

Prior.

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;

And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Pope.

Folly-painting humour, grave himself,

Calls laughter forth. Thomson.

They have as much reason to pretend to, and as much necessity to aspire after, the highest accomplishments of a Christian and solid virtue, as the gravest and wisest among Christian philosophers.

Lucy.

2. Of weight; not futile; credible. Little used.

The Roman state was of all others the most celebrated for their virtue, as the gravest of their own writers, and of strangers, do bear them witnesses.

Grew's Cosmology.

3. Not showy; not tawdry: as, a grave suit of cloaths.

4. Not sharp of sound; not acute.

Accent, in the Greek names and usage, seems to have regarded the tone of the voice; the acute

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.] Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,

Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, Fr.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

The quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unsolvable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards: but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth.

Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks.

That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,
And to their general fend a brave defiance?

Addison's Cato.
GREATNESS. n. f. [from great.]
1. Largeness of quantity or number.
2. Comparative quantity.

We can have no positive idea of any space or duration, which is not made up of and commen-surate to repeated numbers of feet or yards, or days or years, and whereby we judge of the greatness of these sort of quantities. Locke.

All absent good does not, according to the greatness it has, or is acknowledged to have, cause pain equal to that greatness, as all pain causes desire equal to itself; because the absence of good is not always a pain, as the presence of pain is. Locke.

3. High degree of any quality.
Zeal, in duties, should be proportioned to the greatness of the reward, and the certainty. Rogers.

4. High place; dignity; power; influence; empire.

The most fervile flattery is lodged most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to greatness, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty. Sidney.

Farewel, a long farewel to all my greatness.
Shakespeare.

So many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.
I beg your greatness not to give the law
In other realms, but beaten, to withdraw.

To her makes present of his service teen,
Which she accepts with thanks and goodly gree.
Spenser.

GREECE. n. f. [corrupted from degrees. It is written likewise greeze or grice.] A flight of steps.
Obsolete.

Ev'ry greece of fortune
Is smother'd by that below. Shakespeare.

After the procession, the king himself remaining seated in the quire, the lord archbishop, upon the greece of the quire, made a long oration.

Bacon's Henry VII.
GREEDILY. adv. [from greedy.] Eagerly; ravenously; voraciously; with keen appetite or defire.

Greedy the engorg'd without restraint. Mil.
He swallow'd it as greedy

As parched earth drinks rain. Denham.

Ev'n deadly plants, and herbs of pois'nous juice,
Wild hunger seeks; and to prolong our breath,
We greedy devour our certain death. Dryden.

GREEDINESS. n. f. [from greedy.] Ravenousness; voracity; hunger; eagerness of appetite or desire.

Fox in stealth, wolf in greediness.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

Thither with all greediness of affection are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.
If thou wert the wolf, thy greediness would afflict thee.

Shakespeare's Timon.
I with the same greediness did feed,

As water when I thirst, to swallow Greek. Denb.

GRE'EDY. adj. [31ædiz, Saxon, grædig, Dan. gretig, Dutch.]

1. Ravenous; voracious; hungry.
As a lion that is greedy of his prey. Pf. xvii. 12.

and bring him food. King Charles.

2. Eager; vehemently desirous. It is now commonly taken in an ill sense.

Greedy to know, as is the mind of man,
Their cause of death, swift to the fire she ran.

Fairfax.
The ways of every one that is greedy of gain.

Proverbs.
Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will,
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill. Dryden.

While the reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands.

Dryden's Virgil.
How fearful would he be of all greedy and unjust ways of raising their fortune?

Low.
GREEN. adj. [grün, German; green, Dutch.]

1. Having a colour formed commonly by compounding blue and yellow; of the colour of the leaves of trees or herbs. The green colour is said to be most favourable to the sight.

The general colour of plants is green, which is a colour that no flower is of: there is a greenish primrose, but it is pale, and scarce a green.

Bacon's Natural History.
Groves for ever green.

Pope.
2. Pale; sickly: from whence we call the maid's disease the green sickness, or chlorosis. Like it is Sappho's χλωροί μοῖρος.

Was the hope drunk
Wherein you drest yourself? Hath it slept since?

And wakes it now to look so green and pale
At what it did so freely. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

There's never any of these demure boys come to any proof: they fall into a kind of male green sickness. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

GRE

'Till the green sickness and love's force betray'd
To death's remorseless arms th' unhappy maid.

Garth.

in Spring.

If I have any where said a green old age, I have Virgil's authority; Sed cruda deo viridisque senectus.

Dryden.
4. New; fresh; as, a green wound.

The door is open, sir; there lies your way:
You may be jogging while your boots are green.

Shakespeare.
Griefs are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out.

Shakespeare's Henry IV.
In a vault,

Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies festering in his blood. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A man that studieth revenge keepeth his own wounds green, which otherwise would heal and do well. Bacon's Essay.

I might dilate on the temper of the people, the power, arts, and interest of the contrary party, but those are invidious topicks, too green in our remembrance. Dryden.

5. Not dry.
If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and fasteth off from any inclination unto furious attempts; must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are of themselves as dry fowel, apt beforehand unto tumults? Hooker's Dedication.

Being an olive tree
Which late he fell'd; and being green, must be Made lighter for his manage. Chapman.

Of fragility the cause is an impotency to be extended, and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and so dry wood is more fragil than green.

Bacon's Natural History.
If you but consider a piece of green wood burning in a chimney, you will readily discover in the disbanded parts of it, the four elements. Boyle.

The green doth often heat the ripe, and the ripe
so heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer's Husb.

6. Not roasted; half raw.
Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green, when it is half roasted. Watts's Logic.

7. Unripe; immature; young; because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My fallad days,
When I was green in judgment, cold in blood!

Shakespeare.
O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;
So many graces in so green an age.

Dryden.
You'll find a difference Between the promise of his greener days,
And these he masters now. Shakespeare's Henry V.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mortim. Husb.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are feen
Upon the spit, next May produces green.

King's Cookery.
GREEN. n. f.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd.

Shakespeare.
But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn;

And walks wear fresher green at your return.

Dryden.
Cinnabar, illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in day-light; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively. Newton's Opticks.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and

and blue: if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green.

Watts's Logic.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town.

Shakespeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,

Where no print of step hath been,

you may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your greenhouse, kindle some charcoal.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like so many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure.

Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse.

Spektator.

GREENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green;
tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, unt'y'd,
As each had been a bride.

Spenser.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow.

Newt. Opt.

GREENLY. adv. [from green.]

quence; nor have I cunning in protestation.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

GREENNESS. n. f. [from green.]

1. The quality of being green; viridity; viridness.
About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, stateliness of growth, continual

GRE

greenness, or poetical fancies have made at any time famous.

Sidney.

In a meadow though the meer grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify.

Ben Jonson.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greenness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself.

Digby on Bodies.

2. Immaturity; unripeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excused by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife.

Sidney.

3. Freshness; vigour.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person.

South.

4. Newness.

GREENSICKNESS. n. f. [green and sickness.] The disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces.

That to the greenwood shade he took his way;

For Cymon shunn'd the church.

Dryden.

TO GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; gnetan,
Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.

I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves.

Donne.

I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great prediction;

To me you speak not.

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grive; griff, Welsh, probably from the English.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;

For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.
Shakespeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind. South.

The mother was so afflicted at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she died for grief of it. Addison.

2. Grievance; harm. [Grief, French.] Not in use.

Be fastidious for redress of all these griefs,

And I will set this foot of mine as far

As who goes farthest. Shakespeare.

The king hath sent to know

The nature of your griefs, and whereupon

You conjure from the breast of civil peace

Such bold hostility? Shakespeare. Henry IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity? Swift.

To GRIEVE. v. a. [grever, French; griever, Flemish; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men. Luke, iii. 33.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation. Psalms.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.

Grieved at the thought, he vow'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches. Ross.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembreth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will. Perkins.

To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold The end of all thy offspring end so sad. Milton.

With equal mind what happens let us bear; Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care. Dryden's Fables.

GRIEVOUSNESS. n. f. [from grievous.] Sorrow; pain; calamity.

They fled from the swords, from the drawn sword and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war. Isaiah, xxi. 15.

GRIFFIN. n. f. [This should rather be written GRIFON. } ten grifon, or gryphon; gryps, yuk; but it is generally written griffin.] A fabled animal, said to be generated between the lion and eagle, and to have the head and paws of the lion, and the wings of the eagle.

Of all bearing among these winged creatures, the griffin is the most ancient. Peacham on Blazoning.

Aristeus, a poet of Proconesus, affirmed, that near the one-eyed nations griffins defended the mines of gold. Brown.

GRIG. n. f. [bricke, Bavarian, a little duck.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel.

3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus festivus, Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,

She laughs to see me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,

And brisk as bottle-ale. Swift.

To GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harrafs; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,

We're grill'd all at Temple-bar. Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [gumma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look so grim. Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,

Bound in those gloomy caves with adamantine chains. Dryden.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face Bears a command in't. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes

Would to the bleeding grim alarm Excite the mortified man. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Expert to turn the sway

Of battle, open when and where to close The ridges of grim war. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He that dares to die,

May laugh at the grim face of law, and scorn The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant's brow. Denham's Sobhy.

Their swarthy hosts would darken all our plains, Doubling the native horror of the war,

And making death more grim. Addison's Cato.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him

Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,

This better check gave. Chapman.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim. Shakespeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.]

1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insolence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques, Against th' haranguer's politicks,

With smart remarks of leering faces, And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.

The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Estrange.

The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spencer.

2. Air or affectation.

Vice is a vizzard, to avoid grimace, Allows all freedom, but to fee the face. Grawvill.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;

There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize, Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato.

2. Sour; sullenly.

The augurs

Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly, And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror; frightfulness of visage. Te

To GRIN. v. n. [grennian, Saxon; grinsen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth.

A lion's hide he wears;
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grin'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantick mirth.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoiclike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.
I like not such grinning honour as Sir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and shewing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.
—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shewed twenty teeth at a grin.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and argument; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in.

GRIN. n. f. [grȳn, grȳne, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bird that hasteth to his grin,
Not knowing the perils.

The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part. pass. ground. [grunban, gegrunben, grohtud, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal?

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack things, said I,
Thy fithe is dull; whet it, for shame:

No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;

But where one man would have me grind it,
Twenty to one too sharp do find it.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And countenance stern, upstanding, gan to grind

His greatest teeth for great disdain.
Harsh sounds, of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach.

4. To harass; to oppress.
Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries encrease'd.

To GRIND. v. n.
1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they send thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.
Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]
1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.
His heart a solid rock, to fear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone.

Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder.

3. [Grind' togar.] The back teeth: the double teeth.
The teeth are in men of three kinds: sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both.

He the raging lion's confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; so they
With the old hunter starve for want of prey.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliment.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinderstry'd.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught.

GRINDLESTONE. n. f. [from grind and stone.]
GRINDSTONE. n. f. The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened.

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grindstone.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coulters, and to whet their natural faculties.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone till bright.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.

The frightfull grin
Be the winner.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

GRIP. n. f. A small ditch.

To GRIPE. v. a. [grupan, Gothick; grupan, Saxon; gripen, Dutch; gripp, Scottish.]

1. To hold with the fingers closed; to grasp; to press with the fingers.

He that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action
With wrinkl'd brows.

2. To hold hard.
He seiz'd the shining bough with gripping hold,
And rent away with ease the ling'ring gold.

3. [Gripper, French.] To catch eagerly; to seize.

You took occasion to be quickly woo'd,
To gripe the gen'ral sway into your hands.

4. To close; to clutch.
Unlucky Welford! thy unfeeling master,
The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.

5. To pinch; to press; to squeeze.
A wond'rous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws
in blood.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.
Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.

To GRIPE. v. n.
1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ach.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripes in us.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.
It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less, and grew stark beggars.

GRIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd with an unlineal hand.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripe with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.

2. Squeeze; pressure.
Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;

'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe.

3. Oppression; crushing power.
I take my cause
Out of the gripe of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my matter.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.
Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound!

Canst thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,

GRI

Frank'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty?

Orway.

5. [In the plural.] Belly-ach; colick.

In the jaundice the chole is wanting; and the isterial have a great fourness and gripes, with windiness. Floyer.

GRI'PER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer;
extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are profess'd usurers, gripers, monsters of men, and harpies. Burton on Melancholy.

GRI'PINGLY. adv. [from griping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts, and work griping. Bacon's Natural History.

GRI'PLE. n. f. A greedy fnatcher; a griping miser. Spenser.

GRISAMBER. n. f. Used by Milton for ambergrife.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,

In pastry built, or from the spit, or boil'd,

Grisamber steam'd. Milton's Paradise Regained.

GRISE. n. f. [See GRECE, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour. Shakespeare's Othello.

GRI'SKIN. n. f. [griskin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRI'SLY. adj. [grisl, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grisl locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round. Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisl toadstool grown there might I see. Spenser.

My grisl countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Back slept those too fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grisl king;

Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon. Milton.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grisl legions that troop

Under the footy flag of Acheron. Milton.

The beauteous form of fight
Is chang'd, and war appears a grisl fight. Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his grisl face,
The king of terrors, raging in thy race. Dryden's Innocence.

Thus the grisl spectre spoke again. Dryden's Fables.

Clofe by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd, with many a grisl wound. Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grisl bear. Addison.

GRIST. n. f. [grist, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Left miller lack water. Tusser's Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,

And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall. Miller of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wife logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;

And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist. Swift.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill. Ayliffe's Paragon.

GRI'STLE. n. f. [gristle, Saxon.] A cartilage;
a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard,
as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles. Bacon's Natural History.

Left the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annulary gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles;

but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there,
to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilation of the gullet. Ray on the Creation.

GRI'STLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous;
made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small gristly bits that are eaten off from the lung-pipes. Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these gristly junctures. More against Atheism.

Fins are made of gristly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans. Ray on the Creation.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a gristly windpipe. Grew.

Each pipe, distinguish'd by its gristly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings. Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [gritta, gneot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked, or coarsely ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silefian bole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap. Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root Pierce the obstructing grit and restive marle. Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses;
not to be dissolved or diffused by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One fort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which,
if wetted with saltwater, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards diffused by water. This is the pulvis petolanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plaisters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocollo of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of folding metals better than borax. The ferru-gineous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy. Hill on Fossils.

GRI'TTINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness;
the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grittiness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRI'TTY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof. Newton's Opticks.

GRI'ZELIN. adj. [from properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is furest to ripen in our climate. Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray; grizzle,
French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub; what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face? Shakespeare.

GRI'ZZLED. adj. [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head. Shakespeare.

His beard was grizzled: no
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakes. Hamlet.

His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth, their asses ears to hide. Dryden's Juvenal.

GRI'ZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, French.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled, and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN. v. n. [granan, Saxon; groan, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Men groan from out of the city, and the foul of the wounded crieth out. Job, xxiv. 12.

Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit. Wisd. v. 3.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope's Odyssey.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the
air,

Are made, not mark'd! Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive. Dryden.

Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play. Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.

Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,

Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad; agonizing. Not used.

Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dutch; grosso, Italian.]

1. A piece valued at four pence.

2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont
To call them woollen vaffals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

I dare lay a groat,
A tertian ague is at least your lot. Dryd. Fab.

Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulks taken off. Ainsworth.

GRQ'CKER. n. f. [This should be written graffer, from grofs, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grofsus, a fig, which their present state seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar and plums and spices for gain. Watts's Logic.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove. Garth.

GRO'CERY. n. f. [from grocer.] Grocers ware, such as tea; sugar; raisins; spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GRO'GERAM. n. f. [gras grain, French; groffo, GRO'GRAM. } granus, low Latin. Ainsworth.

GRO'GRAN. } Stuff woven with large woof and a rough pile.

Certes

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,

Your only wearing is your program. Donne.
Natolia affords great store of chamelots and gro- grams. Smyth.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, gro- gram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in program than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in brocade.

Addison's Spectator.

Plain goody would no longer down;

'Twas madam in a program gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [Of uncertain derivation.] The part next the thigh.

Antipleus, a son of Priam, threw

His lance at Ajax through the prease, which went by him, and flew

On Leucus, wife Ulysses' friend: His groine it fmoote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,

And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pass'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound

Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground. Dryden.

GRO-MWELL. n. f. [litbosperrum, Latin.] Gro-mill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [groom, Dutch.]

1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.

From Egypt's kings ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom. Fairfax.

Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room. Donne.

In the time of Edward VI. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning certain of David's psalms into verse. Peacham.

Would'st thou be touch'd

By the presuming hands of faucy grooms?
Dryden's Don. Sebast.

Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their shepherds, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.

I presume for to intreat this groom,
And silly maid, from danger to redeem. Fairfax.

3. A man newly married.

By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are drest'd;

All Rhodes is fummon'd to the nuptial feast. Dryd.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.

He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.

The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tem-per'd, with several holes in it, each less than other; and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.] To feel where one cannot see.

My sea-grown scarf about me, in the dark Grop'd I, to find out them. Shaksp. Hamlet.

We grobe for the wall like the blind, and we grobe as if we had no eyes. Jf. lix. 10.

They meet with darkness in the clearest light;
And grobe at noon, as if involv'd with night. Sand.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Estrange.

This, no doubt, is better for men that they should in the dark grobe after knowledge; as St.
Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his out-stretched arms around him
grop'd. Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,

I grobe and guess no more, but see my way. Arbut.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grobe mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain.
Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grobe them out by twilight, and by darkness almost to discover that, whose existence is evinced by light.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grobe. Swift.

GRO'PER. n. f. [from grobe.] One that searches in the dark.

GROSS. adj. [gros, French; grosso, Italian;
crassus, Latin.]

1. Thick; bulky.

The crows and choughs, that wing the midway
air,

Shew scarce so gross as beetles. Shaksp. King Lear

There are two gross volumes concerning the power of popes. Baker on Learning.

2. Shameful; unseemly; enormous.

He ripely considered how gross a thing it were for men of his quality, wife and grave men, to live with such a multitude, and to be tenants at will under them. Hooker.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome hath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of fundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin.

Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, which, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Law.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure;
unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross

You love my son: invention is aharm'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do'st not.

Shaksp. All's well that ends well.

Examples gross as earth exhort me.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Belial came last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the gross sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Sparr.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

4. Inelegant; disproportionate in bulk.

The fun's oppressive ray the roseat bloom
Of beauty blasting, gives the gloomy hue,
And feature gross. Thomson's Summer.

5. Dense; not refined; not attenuated; not pure.

It is manifest, that when the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object is in the *gross*er, things shew greater; but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the *gross*er medium, and the object in the finer. Bacon's Natural History.

Of elements,

The *gross*er feeds the purer; earth the sea,
Earth and the sea feed air. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Light fumes are merry, *gross*er fumes are sad;
Both are the reasonable soul run mad. Dryd. Fab.

Or fuck the mists in *gross*er air below,
Or dip their pinions in the painted bow. Pope.

6. Stupid; dull.

If she doth then the subtle sense excel,
How gross are they that drown her in the blood?
Davies.

And in the clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear. Milt.

Some men give more light and knowledge by the bare stating of the question with perspicu-ity and justness, than others by talking of it in gross confusion for whole hours together. Watts.

7. Coarse; rough; opposite to delicate.

Fine and delicate sculptures are helped with nearness, and gross with distance. Watson's Archib.

8. Thick; fat; bulky.

His stature was of just height and all proportionate dimensions, avoiding the extremes of gross and meager. Fill.

GROSS. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The main body; the main force.

The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste
The deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or, if with caution leisurely were past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

Several casuists are of opinion, that, in a battle,
you should discharge upon the gross of the enemy, without levelling your piece at any particular person. Addison's Freeholder.

The gross of the people can have no other prospect in changes and revolutions than of publick blessings. Addison.

2. The bulk; the whole not divided into its several parts.

Certain general inducements are used to make saleable your cause in gross. Hooker.

There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Albion's Description of the World.

There is confession, that is, the acknowledging our sins to God; and this may be either general or particular: The general is, when we only confess in gross that we are sinful; the particular, when we mention the several sorts and acts of our sins.
Duty of Man.

Remember, son,

You are a general: other wars require you;
For see the Saxon gross begins to move.

Dryden's King Arthur.

Notwithstanding the decay and loss of fundry trades and manufactures, yet, in the gross, we ship off now one third part more of the manufactures, as also led and tin, than we did twenty years past.
Child on Trade.

3. Not individual; but a body together.

He hath ribbons of all the colours i' th' rainbow;
they come to him by the gross. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shak. Mer. of Venice.

You see the united design of many persons to make up one figure: after they have separated themselves in many petty divisions, they rejoin one by one into a gross. Dryden.

4. The chief part; the main mass.

Comets, out of question, have likewise power and effect over the gross and mass of things.
Bacon's Essays.

The articulate sounds are more confused, though the gross of the sound be greater. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

5. The number of twelve dozen. [Grosse, Fr.].

It is made up only of that simple idea of an unite repeated; and repetitions of this kind, joined together, make those distinct simple modes of a dozen, a gross, and a million. Locke.

GROSSLY. adv. [from gross.]

1. Bulkily; in bulky parts; coarsely: as, this matter is grossly pulveriz'd.

2. Without subtilty; without art; without delicacy; without refinement; coarsely; palpably.

Such kind of ceremonies as have been so grossly and shamefully abused in the church of Rome, where they remain, are scandalous. Hooker.

Treason and murder ever kept together,
As two yoke devils sworn to others purpose;
Working so grossly in a natural cause,
That admiration did not whoop at them. Shakespeare's Henry V.

And thine eyes

See it so grossly shown in thy behaviour,
That in their kind they speak it. Shakespeare.

What! are we cuckolds ere we have de-serv'd it?

—Speak not so grossly. Shaksp. Merc. of Venice.

What I have said has been forced from me, by seeing a noble sort of poetry so happily restored by one man, and so grossly copied by almost all the rest. Dryden.

If I speak of light and rays as endued with colours,

lours, I would be understood to speak not philosophically and properly, but grossly, and according to such conceptions as vulgar people would be apt to frame. Newton's Opticks.

While it is so difficult to learn the springs and motives of some facts, it is no wonder they should be so grossly misrepresented to the public by curious inquisitive heads. Swift.

GROSSNESS. n. f. [from gross.]

1. Coarseness; not subtilty; thicknes; spissitude; density; greatness of parts.

The purpose is perspicuous even as substance, whose grossness little characters sum up. Shakespeare.

And I will purge that mortal grossness so, That thou shalt like an airy spirit go. Shakespeare.

The cause of the epilepsy from the stomach is the grossness of the vapours which arise and enter into the cells of the brain. Bacon's Natural History.

Then all this earthy grossness quit;

Attrit'd with stars we shall for ever sit, Triumphant over death. Milton.

This being the first colour which vapours begin to reflect, it ought to be the colour of the finest and most transparent skies, in which vapours are not arrived to that grossness requisite to reflect other colours. Newton's Opticks.

For envy'd wit, like Sol-eclip'd, was known Th' opposing body's grossness, not its own. Pope.

2. Inelegant fatness; unwieldy corpulence.

Wife men, that be over-fat and fleshy, go to sojourn abroad at the temperate diet of some sober man; and so, by little and little, eat away the grossness that is in them. Ascham.

3. Want of refinement; want of delicacy; intellectual coarseness.

I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief that they were fairies. Shakespeare.

Whatever beauties it may want, 'tis free at least from the grossness of those faults I mentioned. Dryden.

What a grossness is there in the mind of that man, who thinks to reach a lady's heart by wounding her ears! Clarissa.

GROT. n. f. [grotto, French; grotta, Italian.] A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot, Certain to meet that worst of evils, thought. Prior.

Awful see the Egerian grot. Pope.

GROTESQUE. adj. [grotesque, French; grotesco, Italian.] Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champaign head Of a steep wilderness, whose hairy sides With thickest overgrown, grotesque and wild, Access deny'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting, which is out of nature; for a farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this. Dryden's Duressay.

An hideous figure of their foes they drew, Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true, And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view. Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors, Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors. Pope.

GROTTA. n. f. [grotta, French; grotta, Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run, The bow'rs of kings, to shade them from the sun. Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak. Woodward on Fossils.

GROVE. n. f. [from grava.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon methought The wood began to move:

Within this three mile may you see it coming; I say, a moving grove. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales: Thrice happy files! Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove. Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love, Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove. Granville.

Can fierce passion vex his breast, While every gale is peace, and every grove Is melody? Thompson's Spring.

To GROVEL. v. n. [grufle, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground. The steel-head passage wrought, And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing wound. Spenser.

What see'st thou there? king Henry's diadem, Inchas'd with all the honours of the world! If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face, Until thy head be circled with the fame. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Oke mast and beech, and cornell fruit they eate, Groveling-like fwine on earth, in fowlelt fort. Chapman.

Now they lie Groveling and prostrate on yon lake of fire. Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go. Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require this part of excellence: not to do it, is to want courage, and not dare to shew themselves: 'tis to creep and grovel on the ground. Dryden's Duressay.

2. To be mean; to be without dignity or elevation. I must disclaim what'er he can exprefs; His groveling sense will shew my passion less. Dryden.

Several thoughts may be natural which are low and groveling. Addison's Spectator.

GROUND. n. f. [grundo, Saxon; grunde, Dan.]

1. The earth, considered as superficially extended, and therefore related to tillage, travel, habitation, or almost any action. The main mass of terrene matter is never called the ground. We never distinguish the terraqueous globe into ground and water, but into earth, or land, and water; again, we never say under earth, but under ground. Israel shall go on dry ground through the sea. Ez. xiv. 16.

Man to till the ground None was, and from the earth a dewy mist Went up, and water'd all the ground. Milton.

From the other hill To their fix'd station, all in bright array, The cherubim descended, on the ground Gliding meteorous. Milton.

A black bituminous gurge Boils up from under ground. Milton.

And yet so nimble he would bound, As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.

2. The earth as distinguished from air or water. I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiab.

There was dew upon all the ground. Judges, vi. 40.

8. Dregs; lees; faeces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors. Set by them cyder, verjuice, four drink, or grounds. Mortimer.

Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal. Sharp's Surgery.

9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterwards painted. We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours. Blakewith.

When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden's Duressay.

10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported. O'er his head A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread, Azure the ground, the sun in gold shone bright. Cowley.

Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.

Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine, The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.

11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised. Get a prayer-book in your hand, And stand between two churchmen, good my lord; For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakespeare's Richard III.

12. First hint; first traces of an invention; that which gives occasion to the rest. Though jealousy of state th' invention found, Yet love refin'd upon the former ground; That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly, Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.

13. The first principles of knowledge. The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Preface to Accidence.

Here statesmen, or of them they which can read, May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.

The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolved; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly. Hammond.

After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture. Milton on Education.

14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle. He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.

Making happiness the ground of his unhappiness, and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sidney.

The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.

In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.

Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures. Clarendon.

Sound judgment is the ground of writing well. Roscommon.

Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would betrust. Dryd.
It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.

If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.

Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kettlewell.

Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.

The miraculous increase of the professors of Christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.

15. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;

And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Daniel.
16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.

At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to lose ground. Sidney.

Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their ground,
While our's with easy victory were crown'd. Dryden.

He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Seneffe. Dryd. Fab. Pref.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.

Ev'ning mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Adelphi's Spect.

Even whilst we speak our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment. Add.

18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.

Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

If they get ground and vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.

Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph gloriously over the others. Atterbury.

19. State of progress or recession.

I have known too many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.

The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage: she runs apace, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground. Dr. Duf.

20. The foil to set a thing off.

Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shakespeare.

To GROUND. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground.

2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.
Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.

The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other Christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.

It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.

If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dryden's Aurungs.

Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.

3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.

Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph. iii. 17.
GROUND. The preterite and part. pass. of grind.

How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd looks a diamond. Hudibras.

GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.

GROUND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.

A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dryden's Enid.

Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large straight shoots, which they call ground-ash. Mort. Husbandry.

GROUND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Walt. Ang.

GROUND-FLOOR. n. f. [from ground and floor.] The lower story of a house.

GROUND-IVY. n. f. [bedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GROUND-OAK. n. f. [from ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the coopers trade for the making of hoops, either of hasef or ash; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ash. Mort.

GROUND-PINE. n. f. [chamaepitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of refin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road-sides. Hill's Materia Medica.

GROUND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several sizes of the ground-plates, breast-summer, and beams. Martimer.

GROUND-PLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can'st thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon. Sidney.

A ground-plot square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building.

GRO'UND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbutnot on Coins.

The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n;
'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GRO'UND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseeched him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler.

GRO'UNDEDLY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanville.

GRO'UNDLESS. adj. [from ground.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear
Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Freeholder.

GRO'UNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Tillotson.

GRO'UNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water: hence one of the low vulgar. Hammer.

It offends me to the soul to hear a robusiteous perriwig-pated fellow-tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

GRO'UNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use.

sels? Do you love your sorrow so well, as to grudge me part of it?
Sidney.

'Tis not in thee
To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid:
He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began.
Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudge'd the praise, but more the rob'd reward.
Dryden.

Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition.
Spektor.

Let us consider the inexhausted treasures of the ocean: and though some have grugged the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God.
Bentley.

I have often heard the Presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments.
Swift.

GUERDON. n. f. [guerdon, gordon, French.] A reward; a recompence, in a good and bad sense. A word now no longer in use.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while

Amazed stands herself to mock'd to see,

By him who has the guerdon of his guile,

For so misfiguring her true knight to be. Spenser.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the just guerdon of all his former villainies. Knolles.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers,
And flits the thin-spun life. Milton.

To GUESS. v. a. [ghissen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!

You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death. Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come, where God pleaseth not to give impediment? Raleigh's History.

There issue swarming bands

Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drefs,
To be Taxcallan enemies I guess. Dryden's Indian Emperor.

Nor can imagination guess,

How that ungrateful charming maid

My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God. Stillingfleet.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces. Shakespeare.

His guess was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess

His art's like phytick, but a happy guess. Dryden.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,

Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess,

True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUESSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer;

one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the last fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crocheter,

To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,

To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet,

Whom wouldst thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUESSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakespeare's King Lear.

GUEST. n. f. [gæst, gijt, Saxon; gwist,

Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke xix. 7.

Methinks a father

Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest

That best becomes the table. Shakespeare. Wint. Tak.

Tell my royal guest

I add to his commands my own request. Dryden's Æneid.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O defarts, defarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild ravenous beasts, which in you are wanting? Sidney.

Those happiest smiles

That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know

What guest were in his eyes; which parted thence

As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUESTRITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.] Offices

due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear

A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear

In his black fleets that guest-rite to the war. Chapman.

GUESTCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.]

Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guestchamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? Mark, xiv. 14.

as water running with intermissions out of a narrow-mouthed vessel.

GUI'DAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Amisworth.

GUI'DANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them. Atto b.

Particular application must be left to Christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young—but thy experience'd age,

Wants not the guidance of a former sage. Rowell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Scayf.

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide

you into all truth. Jo. xvi. 13.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims, when nothing but the interest of this world guides men,

they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs

are not to be put up. Kentwell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me. Pf. xxxi. 3.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St. Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, French, from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou gavest them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wisd. xviii. 3.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance

So far to make us wist for ignorance?

And rather in the dark to grope our way,

Than, led by a false guide, to err by day? Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,

And left him to an happy guide. Waller.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorised, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument: nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,

But we have sure experience for our guide. Dryden's Fables.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governor or superintendant.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,

Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,

To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd. Dryden.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,

Whose every puff bears empty shades away,

Which guideless in those dark dominions stray. Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. f. [from guide.] Director; regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakespeare.

That person, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby,

instead of reaching his vitals, opened an imposthume,

the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chirurgion, and Providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUI'DON. n. f. [French.] A standard-bearer;

a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gildcrup, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society; a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence.

ence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution. Cowsl.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guild hall affords.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
In woollen cloth it appears, by those ancient guilds that were settled in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded absent foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake.

Pope's Dunciad.
GUILE. n. f. [guille, gille, old French, the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous subtilty.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft fighting fore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and sighs she did abhor.

Spenser.
When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.
For thou his malice and false guile contemn:
Subtile he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL. adj. [guile and full.]
1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.
The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guileful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, through all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The guileful phantom now forsook the throud,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud.

Dryden's Æneid.
2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corpses of Bassianus lay.

Shakespeare's Titus Andronicus.
GUILEFULLY. adv. [from guileful.] Infidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milton.

GUILEFULNESS. n. f. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.

GUILELESS. adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness; simply honest.

GUILER. n. f. [from guile. See BEGUILE.] One that betrays into danger by insidious practices.
But he was wary wife in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So goodly did beguile the guiler of the prey.

Spenser.
GUILT. n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]

1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.

It was neither guilt of crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry VII.

When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.

Clofe pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
These dreadful summoners grace.

Shakespeare's King Lear.
GUILTILY. adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,

And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
GUILTINESS. n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his flight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness. Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakespeare.

GUILTLESS. adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this command to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning.

Shakespeare's Richard III.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakespeare's Othello.

Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

Numbers, v. 31.
Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wilt'st aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.

Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd, Nor knew nor wish'd he that those vows he made

On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryd.

The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryden.

Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUILTLESSLY. adv. [from guiltless.] Without guilt; innocently.

GUILTLESSNESS. n. f. [from guiltless.] Innocence; freedom from crime.

A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUILTLY. adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.

Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?

—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakespeare's Love's Labour Lost.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence's death? Shakespeare.

We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he be-fought us, and we would not hear. Genesis, xlii. 21.

With mortal hatred I purfu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife:
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind.

Dryden.
Farewel the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans.

Dryden.
There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson.

2. Wicked; corrupt.

All the tumult of a guilty world,
Toft by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.

GUINEA. n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa, abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.

By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.

GUINEADROPPER. n. f. [guinea and drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.

Who now the guineadropper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards.

Guinea.
GUINEAHEN. n. f. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.

GUINEAPEPPER. n. f. [capsicum, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

pira, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]

1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.
His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.

Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchant the valiant and beguile the wife. Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise;
and, upon my life, fast asleep: observe her, stand close. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms, in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield,
Awaiting what command their mighty chief Hath to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Par. Lost.

Back, shepherds, back;
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise,
As Mercury did first devise. Milton.

Their external shapcs are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Mov.

2. Practice; custom; property.
I have drunk wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the foole, and moves the wife. Chapman.

This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben Jonson.

The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To flight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.
When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consump-tions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.

The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed to many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUITAR. n. f. [guitarra, Italian; guitare, Fr.]
A stringed instrument of music.

Sallads and eggs and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian guitar's guitar. Prior.

GULCH. } n. f. [from gulo, Latin.] A little GULCHIN. } glutton. Skinner.

GULES. adj. [perhaps from gule, the throat.]
Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakespeare's Timon.

He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couched in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion smear'd
With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gules. Shakespeare.

GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]
1. A bay; an opening into land.
The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Corfu, into the gulf of the Adriatic. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.
Thence turning back, in silence soft they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulf of deep Avernus' hole. Spenser.

I know

GUL

GUM

GUN

I know thou'dst rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulf,
Than flatter him in a bower. Shaksp. Cor.

This is the gulf through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description.

Addison on Italy.
The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shak. Hen. V.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.
Scull of dragon, tooth of wolf,
Witches mummy; maw and gulf
Of the ravening salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' th' dark. Shak. Macb.

Gu'LFY, adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; voracious.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Oose, or gulfy Dun. Milton.

All their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And scap'd the perils of the gulfy main. Pope's Od.

High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile.
Pope's Odyssy.

To GULL, v. a. [guiller, to cheat, old French.]
To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie frait in my bed.

Shakspere's Twelfth Night.
Yet love these forc'ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too too politick. Hudibras.

They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enlaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.

For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-riden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He footh'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. [Mergus.] A sea-bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.
I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shaksp. Much Ado.

Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not,
'tis an apparent cheat and gull.

Government of the Tongue.
3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us so,
As that ungente gull, the cuckow bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shaksp. Henry IV.

Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,
And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Sh. Twelfth Night.

That paltry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat such gulls as you. Hudibras.

Gu'LLCATCHER, n. f. [gull and catch.] A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher.
Shakspere's Twelfth Night.

Gu'LLER, n. f. [from gull.] A cheat; an impostor.

Gu'LLERY, n. f. [from gull.] Cheat; imposture.

Gu'LLET, n. f. [goulet, French; gula, Latin.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe; the oesophagus.
It might be his doom,
One day to sing
With gullet in string. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is refrigerated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration, are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.
Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Arbutnot.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylyn.

To Gu'LLY, v. n. [corrupted from gurgle.] To run with noise.

Gu'LLYHOLE, n. f. [gully and hole.] The hole where the gutters empty themselves in the subterraneous sewer.

Gu'LO'SITY, n. f. [gulofus, Latin.] Greediness;
gluttony; voracity.

They are very temperate, seldom offending in ebriety, nor erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats. Brown.

To GULP, v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morfel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them puff off the froth, and gulp amain,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Guy.

GULP, n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep suspirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and fervor. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM, n. f. [gummi, Latin.]
1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstrua; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spiri-

One whose eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shaksp. Otello.

He ripens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.

Her maiden train
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

2. [Goma, Saxon; gumme, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

The babe that milks me,
I'd pluck my nipples from his boneless gums.
Shaksp. Macbeth.

Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

To GUM, v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wifeman's Surgery.

Gu'MMINES, n. f. [from gummy.] The state of being gummy; accumulation of gum.

The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter. Wifeman's Surgery.

Gu'MMOSITY, n. f. [from gummosus.] The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the elastic fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

Gu'MMOUS, adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummos or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Gu'MMY, adj. [from gum.]
1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord. Raleigh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields.
Dryden's Virgil.

How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears. Dryd. Sil.

2. Productive of gum.
The clouds
Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down
Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milne.

3. Overgrown with gum.
The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lazy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN, n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Mr. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canon, gaune, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.] The general name for fire-arms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

These dread curses, like the sun 'gainst glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyself. Shaksp. Henry VI.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knolles's History.

The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil. Cleav.

In vain the dart or glitt'ring sword we shun,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaught'ring gun. Granville.

Gu'NNEL, n. f. [corrupted from gunwale. See GUNWALE.]

Gu'NNER, n. f. [from gun.] Canonier; he whose employment is to manage the artillery in a ship.

The nimble gunner
With lynstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before him. Shak. Hen. V.

They slew the principal gunners, and carried away their artillery. Hayward.

Gu'NNERY, n. f. [from gunner.] The science of artillery; the art of managing cannon.

Gu'NPOWDER, n. f. [gun and powder.] The powder put into guns to be fired. It consists of about fifteen parts of nitre, three parts of sulphur, and two of charcoal. The proportions are not exactly kept.

Gunpowder consisteth of three ingredients, salt-petre, smallcoal, and brimstone. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Burning by gunpowder frequently happens at sea. Wifeman.

nable. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

TO GUSH v. n. [gushen, Dutch.]

1. To flow or rush out with violence; not to spring in a small stream, but in a large body.

A sea of blood gush'd from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments stain'd with filthy gore. Spenser.

The covering of this abyfs was broken asunder,
and the water gush'd out that made the deluge. Barnet.

Incessant streams of thin magnetick rays
Gush from their fountains with impetuous force,
In either pole, then take an adverse course. Blackmore.

On either hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall. Thomson.

2. To emit in a copious effluxion.
The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood. Dryden.

Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe. Pope.

GUSH n. f. [from the verb.] An emission of liquor in a large quantity at once; the liquor fo emitted.

If a lung-vein be bursted, generally at the first cough a great gush of blood is coughed up. Harvey.

GU'SSET n. f. [gousset, French.] Any thing sewed on to cloth in order to strengthen it.

GUST n. f. [gust, French; gustat, Latin.]

1. Sense of tasting.
Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which the offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and fought with fury pride. Dryden's Fables.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all these senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden's Fables.

3. Love; liking.
To kill, I grant, is sin's extreme gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shakespeare's Timon.

Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Estrange.

We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.
The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [From guster, Islandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust, Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakespeare.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech restrained. Bacon's Henry VII.

As when fierce northern blasts from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a shining fleet. Dryden.

Pardon a weak distemper'd foul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. Addison's Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for gusts, sports.

For jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did fit,
As one for knightly gusts and fierce encounters fit. Spenser.

GU'STABLE adj. [gusto, Latin.]

1. To be tasted.
This position informs us of a vulgar error,
terming the gall bitter; whereas there is nothing gustable sweeter. Harvey.

2. Pleasant to the taste.
A gustable thing, seen or smelt, excites the appetite, and affects the glands and parts of the mouth. Derham.

GUSTA'TION n. f. [gusto, Latin.] The act of tasting.

The gullet and conveying parts partake of the nerves of gustation, or appertaining unto sapor. Brown.

GU'STFUL adj. [gust and full.] Tasteful; well-tasted.

What he defaults from some dry insipid fin, is but to make up for some other more gustful. Decay of Piety.

The troubled Tyber chafing with his shores. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind. Thomson.

GUT n. f. [Intestine, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching with many convolutions from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

A vial should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower resound. Bacon's Natural History.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acid or poisonous substance taken inwardly. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food: proverbially.

And cram'd them 'till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudibras.

With false weights their servants guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.
Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bestow

Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In potion'd potion drank't. Hakewill on Providence.

TO GUT v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.
The fishermen save the most part of their fish:
some are gutted, splitted, powdered, and dried. Carew's Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.
In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryden.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having gutted a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

GU'TTATED adj. [from gutta, Latin, a drop.]
Besprinkled with drops; bedropped. Dis.

GU'TTER n. f. [from gutter, a throat, Latin.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half. Maxon.

Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain. Addison on Italy.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.
TO GU'TTER v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling
winds,
The gutter'd rocks and congregated sands,
Traitors ensteep'd to clog the guiltless keel,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by The divine Desdemona. Shakespeare's Othello.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears. Sandys.

First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd. Dryden.

TO GU'TTLE v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandize. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thrift; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence. Dryden.

TO GU'TTLE v. a. [from gut.] To swallow,
A low word.

The fool spit in his porridge, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he guttled them up, and scalded his chops. L'Estrange.

GU'TTLER n. f. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GU'TTULOUS adj. [from guttulus, Latin.] In the form of a small drop.

Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GU'TTURAL adj. [gutturialis, Latin.] Pronounced with the throat; belonging to the throat.

The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural. Bacon.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation. Holder.

GU'TTURALNESS n. f. [from guttural.] The quality of being guttural. Dict.

GU'TWORT n. f. [gut and wort.] An herb.

GYRATION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electrick. Brown.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyrations, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the sensation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains impressed on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place. Newton.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thenceforth his approved skill to ward,
Or strike, or hurlen round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his safe guard,
But rudely rag'd. Spenser.

Does the wild haggard tow'r in the sky,
And to the South by thy direction fly?
Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace? Sandys.

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the Artick pole. Sandys.

GYV

Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyves,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires. Dryden.

GYRED. adj. Falling in rings.
Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose
Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle. Shakespeare.

GYVES. n. f. [gevyu, Welsh.] Fetters; chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on. Shakespeare.

And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,
Enamour'd of their golden gyves. Ben Jonson.

The poor prisoners, boldly starting up, break off their chains and gyves. Knollis.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton.

But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dryden.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship. Shakespeare's Othello.

H.

H A B

H Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, founded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprize, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look fairer ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see. Shakespeare.

Ha! what art thou! thou horrid headless trunk!
It is my Hastings! Rowe's Jane Shore.

2. An expression of laughter. Used with replication.

He faith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smelleth the battle afar off. Job, xxxix. 25.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;
Our plots and delusions
Have wrought such confusions,
That the monarch's a slave to the crown. Dryden.

HAAR. n. f. A fish. Anfworth.

HABEAS CORPUS. [Latin.] A writ, the which, a man indicted of some trespass, being laid in prison for the same, may have out of the King's Bench, thereby to remove himself thither at his own costs, and to answer the cause there. Cowel.

H A B

HABERDASHER. n. f. [This word is ingeniously deduced by Minsheu from habt ibr dast, German, have you this, the expression of a shopkeeper offering his wares to sale.] One who sells small wares; a pedlar.

Because these cunning men are like haberdashers of small wares, it is not amiss to set forth their shop. Bacon.

A haberdasher, who was the oracle of the coffee-house, declared his opinion. Addison.

HABERDINE. n. f. A dried salt cod. Anfworth.

HABERGEON. n. f. [haubergeon, French; balbergium, low Latin.] Armour to cover the neck and breast; breast-plate; neck-piece; gorget.

And halbert some, and some a habergeon;
So every one in arms was quickly dight. Fairfax.

The shot let fly, and grazing
Upon his shoulder, in the passing, Lodg'd in Magnano's brags habergeon. Hudibras.

HABILIMENT. n. f. [habilement, Fr.] Dreß; clothes; garment.

He the fairest Una found,
Strange lady, in so strange habiliment,
Teaching the satyres. Fairy Queen.

My riches are these poor habiliments,
Of which if you should here disfigure me,
You take the sum and substance that I have. Shakespeare.

The clergy should content themselves with wearing gowns and other habiliments of Irish drapery. Swift.

To HABILITATE. v. n. [habilitare, French.] To qualify; to entitle. Not in use.

Divers persons in the house of commons were attainted; and thereby not legal, nor habilitate to serve in parliament, being disabled in the highest degree. Bacon.

HABILITATION. n. f. [from habilitate.] Qualification.

The things are but habilitations towards arms; and what is habilitation without intention and act? Bacon.

HABILITY. n. f. [habilité, French.] Faculty; power: now ability.

HA'BIT. n. f. [habitus, Latin.]

1. State of any thing: as, habitus of body.

2. Dreß; accoutrement; garment.

I shifted
Into a madman's rags, t' assume a semblance
The very dogs disdain'd; and in this habit
Met I my father. Shakespeare's King Lear.

If you have any justice, any pity;
If ye be any thing, but churchmen's habits. Shakespeare.

Both the poets being dressed in the same English habit, story compared with story, judgment may be made betwixt them. Dryden.

The scenes are old, the habits are the same
We wore last year. Dryden.

Change's there are in veins of wit, like those of habits or other modes. Temple.

There are among the statues several of Venus, in different habits. Addison on Italy.

The clergy are the only set of men who wear a distinct habit from others. Swift.

3. Habit is a power or ability in man of doing any thing, when it has been acquired by frequent doing the same thing. Locke.

He hath a better bad habit of frowning than the count Palatine. Shakespeare.

4. Custom;

4. Custom; inveterate use.

The last fatal step is, by frequent repetition of the sinful act, to continue and persist in it, 'till at length settles into a fixed confirmed habit of sin; which being that which the apostle calls the finishing of sin, ends certainly in death; death not only as to merit, but also as to actual infliction. South.

No civil broils have since his death arose,
But faction now by habit does obey;
And wars have that respect for his repose,
As winds for halcyons when they breed at sea.

The force of education is so great, that we may mould the minds and manners of the young into what shape we please, and give the impressions of such habits, as shall ever afterwards remain.

To HABIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress; to accoutre; to array.

Present yourself and your fair princes
Before Leontes;
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Shakespeare, Winter's Tale.
Having called to his memory Sir George Villiers, and the cloaths he used to wear, in which at that time he seemed to be habited, he thought him to be that person. Clarendon.

They habited themselves like those rural deities, and imitated them in their rustick dances. Dryden.
HABITABLE. adj. [habitable, Fr. habitabilis, Lat.] Capable of being dwelt in; capable of sustaining human creatures.

By means of our solitary situation, we know well most part of the habitable world, and are ourselves unknown. Bacon.

That was her torrid and inflaming time;
This is her habitable tropique clime. Donne.
The torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.
Look round the habitable world, how few Know their own good, or knowing it, pursue.

HABITABLENESS. n. f. [from habitable.] Capacity of being dwelt in.

The cutting of the Equinoctial line decides that controversy of the habitableness of the torrid zone. More.

Those ancient problems of the spherical roundness of the earth, the being of antipodes, and of the habitableness of the torrid zone, are abundantly demonstrated. Ray.

HABITANCE. n. f. [from habitatio, Latin.] Dwelling; abode.

What art thou, man, if man at all thou art,
That here in desert hast thine habitance?

And these rich heaps of wealth do't hide apart
From the world's eye, and from her right use. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

HABITANT. n. f. [habitant, Fr. habitant, Latin.] Dweller; one that lives in any place; inhabitant.

Not to earth are those bright luminaries
Officious; but to the earth's habitant. Milton.

Pow'r's celestial to each others view
Stand still confest, though distant far they lie,
Or habitants of earth, or sea, or sky. Pope.

HABITATION. n. f. [habitation, French; habitatio, Latin.]

1. The state of a place receiving dwellers.

Amplitude almost immense, with stars
Numerous, and every star perhaps a world
Of destin'd habitation. Milton.

2. Act of inhabiting; state of dwelling.

For want of habitation and repair,
Dissolve to heaps of ruins. Denham.

Rocks and mountains, which in the first ages were high and craggy, and consequently then inconvenient for habitation, were by continual detention brought to a lower pitch. Woodward.

3. Place of abode; dwelling.

Wisdom, to the end the might save many, built her house of that nature which is common unto all;
she made not this or that man her habitation, but dwelt in us. Hooker.

God oft descends to visit men
Unseen, and through their habitations walks
To mark their doings. Milton.

HABITATOR. n. f. [Latin.] Dweller; inhabitant.

The sun's preference is more continued unto the northern inhabitants; and the longest day in Cancer is longer unto us than that in Capricorn unto the southern habitator. Brown.

HABITUAL. adj. [habitus, from habit, French.] Customary; accustomed; inveterate; established by frequent repetition. It is used for both good and ill.

Sin, there in pow'r before
Once actual; now in body, and to dwell Habitual habitant. Milton.
Art is properly an habitual knowledge of certain rules and maxims. South.

By length of time
The scurf is worn away of each committed crime:
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure ether of the soul remains. Dryden.
'Tis impossible to become an able artist, without making your art habitual to you. Dryden.

HABITUALLY. adv. [from habitual.] Customarily; by habit.

Internal graces and qualities of mind sanctify our natures, and render us habitually holy.

To HABITUATE. v. a. [habituere, Fr.] To accustom; to use one's self by frequent repetition; with to.

Men are first corrupted by bad counsel and company, and next they habituate themselves to their vicious practices. Tillotson.

Such as live in a rarer air are habituated to the exercise of a greater muscular strength. Arbuthnot.

HABITUDE. n. f. [habitus, Lat. habitudo, Fr.] 1. Relation; respect; state with regard to something else.

We cannot conclude this complexion of nations from the vicinity or habitudo they hold unto the sun. Brown.

The will of God is like a freight unalterable rule; but the various comportments of the creature, either thwarting this rule, or holding conformity to it, occasions several habitudes of this rule unto it. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It results from the very nature of things, as they stand in such a certain habitudo, or relation to one another. South.

As by the objective part of perfect happiness we understand that which is best and last, and to which all other things are to be referred: so by the formal part must be understood the best and last habitudo of man toward that best object. Norris.

In all the habitudes of life
The friend, the mistress, and the wife, Variety we still pursue. Swift.

2. Familiarity; converse; frequent intercourse.

His knowledge in the noblest useful arts,
Was such dead authors could not give;
But habitudes with those who live. Dryden.
To write well, one must have frequent habitudes with the best company.

3. Long custom; habit; inveterate use. This is more properly habit.

Mankind is willing to continue in a pleasing error, strengthened by a long habitudo. Dryden.

Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene, and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the loud reply,
Brought by long habitudo from bad to worse;
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse. Prior.

4. The power of doing any thing acquired by frequent repetition.

It is impossible to gain an exact habitudo, without an infinite number of acts and perpetual practice. Dryden.

HABENAB. adv. [hap ne hap, or nap; as would, would, or ne would; will nill, or ne will; that is, let it happen or not.] At random; at the mercy of chance; without any rule or certainty of effect.

He circles draws and squares,
With cyphers, astral characters;
Then looks 'em o'er to understand 'em,

Although set down babnab at random. Hudibras
To HACK. v. a. [paccan, Saxon; hacken, Dutch; bacher, French, from acare, an axe, Saxon.]

1. To cut into small pieces; to chop; to cut slightly with frequent blows; to mangle with unskilful blows. It bears commonly some notion of contempt or malignity.

He put on that armour, whereof there was no one piece wanting, though backed in some places, bewraying some fight not long since passed. Sidney.
What a slave art thou, to back thy sword as thou hast done, and say it was in fight! Shak. Henry IV.
Richard the Second here was back'd to death. Shakespeare.

I'll fight 'till from my bones my flesh be back'd. Shakespeare.

One flourishing branch of his most royal root
Is back'd down, and his summer leaves all faded,
By envy's hand, and murders bloody axe. Shak.
Burn me, back me, hew me into pieces. Dryden.

Not the back'd helmet, nor the dusty field,
But purple vests and flow'ry garlands please. Adelphi.

But fate with butchers plac'd thy priestly stall,
Meek modern faith to murder, back and mawl. Pope.

2. To speak unready, or with hesitation.
Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole, and back our English. Shakespeare.

To HACK. v. n. To hackney; to turn hackney or prostitute. Hammer.

HACKLE. n. f. Raw filk; any flimsy substance unspun.

Take the hackle of a cock or capon's neck, or a plover's top: take off one side of the feather, and then take the hackle filk, gold or silver thread, and make these fast at the bent of the hook. Walton's Angler.

To HACKLE. v. a. [from back.] To dress flax.

HACKNEY. n. f. [hacnai, Welsh; hackney, Teuton; hague, French.]

1. A pacing horse.

2. A hired horse; hired horses being usually taught to pace, or recommended as good pacers.

Light and lewd persons were as easily suborned to make an affidavit for money, as post-horses and hackneys are taken to hire. Bacon.

Who, mounted on a broom, the nag
And hackney of a Lapland hag,
In quest of you came hither post. Hudibras.

3. A hireling; a prostitute.

Three kingdoms rung
With his accumulative and hackney tongue. Rojan.

That is no more than every lover
Does from his hackney lady suffer. Hudibras.

Shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
Or each new pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows. Pope.

4. Any thing let out for hire.

A wit can study in the streets;
Not quite so well, however, as one ought;
A hackney coach may chance to spoil a thought. Pope.

5. Much used; common.

These notions young students in physick derive from their hackney authors. Harvey.

To HACKNEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To practice in one thing; to accustom, as to the road.

He is long hackney'd in the ways of men. Shakespeare.

HACQUETON. n. f. [haquet, old French, a little horse.] Some piece of armour.

You may see the very fashion of the Irish horseman in his long hose, riding shoes of costly cordwain, his hacqueton, and his habergeon. Spenser's State of Ireland.

HAD. The preterite and part. pass. of have.

I had better, you had better, &c. means the same as, it would be better for me or you; or, it would be more eligible: it is always used potentially, not indicatively; nor is had ever used to that import.

We say likewise, it had been better or worse.

I had rather be a country servant maid.
Than a great queen with this condition. Shakespeare.

Had we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause? Add. Cato.

H A G

HAGGACK. n. f. [badot, Fr.] A sea-fish of the cod kind, but small.

The coast is plentifully stored with pilchards, herrings, and haddock. Carew.

HAGT. n. f. [hæft, Saxon; heft, Dutch, from to have or hold.] A handle; that part of any instrument that is taken into the hand.

This brandish'd dagger
I'll bury to the hag in her fair breast.

Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
These extremities of the joints are the hags and handles of the members. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A needle is a simple body, being only made of steel; but a sword is a compound, because its hag or handle is made of materials different from the blade. Wait's Logic.

HAFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To set in a hag. Amfworth.

HAG. n. f. [pægerre, a goblin, Saxon; beckle, a witch, Dutch.]

1. A fury; a she-monster.
Thus spoke th' impatient prince, and made a pause;

His foul hags rais'd their heads, and clapt their hands;

And all the powers of hell, in full applause,
Flourish'd their snakes, and tost their flaming brands. Græharu.

2. A witch; an enchantress.
Out of my door, you witch! you bag, you baggage, you poultar, you runion! Shakespeare.

3. An old ugly woman.
Such affectations may become the young;

But thou, old bag, of threescore years and three,
Is shewing of thy parts in Greek for thee? Dryd.

TO HAG. v. a. [from the noun.] To torment; to harass with vain terror.

That makes them in the dark see visions,
And bag themselves with apparitions. Hudibras.

How are superstitious men bagged out of their wits with the fancy of omens, tales, and visions! L'Estrange.

HAGARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
As bagard hawk, presuming to contend

With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weary pounces all in vain doth spend,

To truss the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Q.
She's too disdainful;

I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakespeare.

2. [Hager, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.

A bagged carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon's back, fell into company together. L'Estrange.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.
Fearful besides of what in fight had pass'd,

His hands and bagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryd.
Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,

Now flushing red, the down-cast bagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith

HAGGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,

Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful baggard. Shakespeare.

2. A species of hawk.
Does the wild baggard tow'r into the sky,

And to the South by thy direction fly? Sandy.
I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aures, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the baggard. Walton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy covert of an yew,
In a dark grot, the baleful baggard lay,

Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HAGGARDLY. adv. [from baggard.] Deformedly; uglily.

For her rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,

How baggardly so'er she looks at home. Dryden.

H A I

HAGGESS. n. f. [from bag or back.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and inclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HAGGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.

But on us both did baggy age steal on,
And wore us out of act. Shakespeare.

TO HAGGLE. v. a. [corrupted from backle or back.] To cut; to chop; to mangle: always in a bad sense.

Suffolk first died, and York all bagged o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay insteep'd. Shakespeare.

TO HAGGLE. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

HAGGLER. n. f. [from baggle.]

1. One that cuts.
2. One that is tardy in bargaining.

HAGGLOPHER. n. f. [hæp and hæp.] A holy writer.

The Jews divide the Holy Scriptures of the Old Testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagglopers.

HAIL. interj. An expression of sudden effort.
Her coats tack'd up, and all her motions just,

She stamps, and then cries hail! at ev'ry thrust. Dryden.

HAIL. n. f. [hazel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling. Locke.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend th' Egyptian sky. Milton.

TO HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.
My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation

when it shall hail, coming down on the forest. Isaiah, xxxii. 19.

HAIL. interj. [hæl, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or υγιασις of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil. Shakespeare.

Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail,

Or health with'd in it, as on other morns. B. Jonf.
The angel hail

Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Milton.

Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail

Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell Receive thy new possessor! Milton.

All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above. Dryden.

Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take. Rowe.

TO HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.

A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hail'd by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen. Knolles.

Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,

And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

HAILSHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.

The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. Hayward.

HAILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.

You are no surer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the fun. Shakespeare.

Hard hailstones lie not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such show'rs of acorns rain. Dryden.

HAILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,

Which the cold North congeals to haily showers. Pope.

H A K

HAIR. n. f. [hæp, Saxon.]

1. One of the common teguments of the body.
It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow. Quincy.

My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakespeare.

Shall the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a drill? Locke.

2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,

Will quicken and accuse thee. Shak. King Lear.
Much is breeding;

Which, like the courser's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleo.

3. Any thing proverbially small.
If thou tak'st more

Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,

Thou diest. Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Course; order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.

He is a curer of fowls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakespeare. Merry Wives of Windsor.

HAIIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written barebrained, unconstant, unsettled, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.

Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrained slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

HAIIRBREATH. n. f. [hair and breath.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.

Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could fling stones at an hairbreath, and not miss. Judge. xx. 16.

I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;

Of hairbreath 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shakespeare.

HAIIRBEL. n. f. The name of a flower; the hyacinth.

HAIIRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.

It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth. Grew's Museum.

HAIIRLACE. n. f. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.

Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia. Harv.

If Molly happens to be careless,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,

She gets a cold as sure as death. Swift.
HAIIRLESS. adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

White beads have arm'd their thin and hairless scalps Against thy majesty. Shakespeare.

HAIIRINESS. n. f. [from hair.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

HAIIRY. adj. [from hair.]

1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.
She his hairy temples then had rounded

With coronet of flowers. Shakespeare.
Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more perspirable. Bacon.

2. Consisting of hair.

Storms have shed
From vines the hairy honours of their head. Dryd.

HAKE. n. f. A kind of fish.

The coast is stored with mackrel and hake. Carew.

H A L

HALKOT. n. f. [from bake.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HAL, in local names, is derived like al from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothic alh signifies a temple, or any other famous building. Gibson's Camden.

HALBERD. n. f. [halbarde, French; halbebarde, Dutch, from barde, an axe, and halbe, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast. Shakespeare.

Our halberds did shut up his passage. Shak. H. VI.
Four knaves in garbs fuccinct, a trusty hand,
Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.

HALBERDIER. n. f. [halbardier, French, from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.

The dukes appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person. Bacon.

The king had only his halberdiers, and fewer of them than used to go with him. Clarendon.

HALCYON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.

Such smiling rogues, as these, footh ev'ry passion,
Bring oil to fire snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters. Shakef.

Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a Winter sea. Dryden.

HALCYON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.

When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the arts of peace. Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from so incompetent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle. Bentley.

HALF. adj. [This should be rather written half, from heal, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.

My feely sheep like well below,
For they been half enough I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wife partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred half men, to be pinioned, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Addison.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and half,
But now he's quite another thing;

I wish he may hold out 'till Spring. Swift.

TO HALF. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.

Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And half him up and down. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Held out to murder. Shakespeare.

Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he half thee to the judge. Luke.

He by the neck hath half'd, in pieces cut,
And set me as a mark on every butt. Sandys.

Thither by harpy-footed furies half'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought. Milton.

This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subdivides and halfeth the heart unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgusted with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be halfed to it when he had no mind? Locke.

In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and half one another about, yet no blood was drawn 'till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

HALER. n. f. [from hale.] He who pulls and hales.

HALF. n. f. plural halves. [Deaf, Saxon, and all the Teutonic dialects. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part. An half acre of land. 1 Sam. xiv. 14.

H A L

Well chosen friendship, the most noble Of virtues, all our joys make double,
And into halves divides our trouble. Denham.

Or what but riches is there known Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half,
Unless it be to squint and laugh? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell;
For none but hands divine could work so well. Dry.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke.

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison on Italy.

Half the misery of life might be extinguished, would men alleviate the general curse by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty in thy foster half Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had proposed to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Arbutnot.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land selected of the best,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

HALF. adv.
1. In part; equally.
I go with love and fortune, two blind guides,
To lead my way; half loth, and half consenting. Dryden.

2. It is much used in composition to signify a thing imperfect, as the following examples will show.

HALF-BLOOD. n. f. One not born of the same father and mother.

Which shall be heir of the two male twins, who, by the dissection of the mother, were laid open to the world? Whether a sister by the half-blood shall inherit before a brother's daughter by the whole-blood? Locke.

HALF-BLOODED. adj. [half and blood.] Mean; degenerate.

The let alone lies not in your good will.
—Nor in thine, lord.

—Half-blooded fellow, yes. Shakespeare. King Lear.

HALF-CAP. n. f. Cap imperfectly set off, or faintly moved.

With certain half caps and cold moving nods,
They froze me into silence. Shakespeare. Tim. of Ath.

HALF-DEAD. n. f. [half and dead, Saxon.] Part. Spenser.

HALF-FACED. adj. [half and faced.] Showing only part of the face; small faced: in contempt.

Proud incroaching tyranny
Burns with revenging fire, whose hopeful colours Advance, a half-faced fun striving to shine. Shakef.

This same half-faced fellow, shadow; give me this man: he presents no mark to the enemy; the foeman may with as great aim level at the edge of a penknife. Shakespeare.

HALF-HATCHED. adj. [half and hatch.] Imperfectly hatched.

Here, thick as hailstones pour
Turnips, and half-hatch'd eggs, a mingled show'r,
Among the rabble rain. Gay.

HALF-HEARD. adj. Imperfectly heard; not heard to an end.

Not added years on years my task could close;
Back to thy native islands might'st thou fail,
And leave half-heard the melancholy tale. Pope.

HALF-MOON. n. f.
1. The moon in its appearance when at half increase or decrease.

2. Any thing in the figure of a half-moon.
See how in warlike muster they appear,
In rhombs and wedges, and half-moons and wings. Milton.

HALF-PENY. n. f. plural half-pence. [half and peny.]

1. A copper coin, of which two make a penny.
Bardolph stole a lute-case, bore it twelve leagues, and fold it for three half-pence. Shakespeare.

H A L

I thank you; and sure, dear friend, my thanks are too dear of a half-penny. Shakespeare.

He cheats for half-pence, and he doffs his coat. Dryden.

To save a farthing in a ferryboat.
Never admit this pernicious coin, no not so much as one single half-penny. Swift.

2. It has the force of an adjective conjoined with any thing of which it denotes the price.

There shall be in England seven half-penny loaves for a penny. Shakespeare.

You will wonder how Wood could get his majesty's broad seal for so great a sum of bad money, and that the nobility here could not obtain the same favour, and make our own half-pence as we used to do. Swift.

HALF-PIKE. n. f. [half and pike.] The small pike carried by officers.

The various ways of paying the salute with the half-pike. Talr.

HALF-PINT. n. f. [half and pint.] The fourth part of a quart.

One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine;
And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope.

HALF-SCHOLAR. n. f. One imperfectly learned.
We have many half-scholars now-a-days, and there is much confusion and inconsistency in the notions and opinions of some persons. Watt.

HALF-SEAS over. A proverbial expression for any one far advanced. It is commonly used of one half drunk.

I am half-seas over to death;
And since I must die once, I would be loth
To make a double work of what's half-finish'd. Dryden.

HALF-SIGHTED. adj. [half and sight.] Seeing imperfectly; having weak discernment.

The officers of the king's household had need be provident, both for his honour and thrift: they must look both ways, else they are but half-sighted. Bacon.

HALF-SPHERE. n. f. [half and sphere.] Hemisphere.

Let night grow blacker with thy plots; and day,
At shewing but thy head forth, start away
From this half-sphere. Ben Jonson.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.] Halibred; imperfect.

I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mungrel-mischievous; for my blood boil'd
To view this brutal act. Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. f. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shakespeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he fees, who is with virtue crown'd,
The tempest rage, and hears the thunder sound;
Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:
Serenely as he liv'd resigns his breath;
Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death. Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. f. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, so little and so light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite. Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to found, to the judgment of the women than of half-witted poets. Swift.

Jack had passed for a poor, well meaning, half-witted, crack-brained fellow: people were strangely surpris'd to find him in such a roguery. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt.

HALIBUT. n. f. A sort of fish. Ainsworth.

HALIDOM. n. f. [halig dom, holy judgment, or halig and dame, for lady.] Our blessed lady. In this it should be Halidom.

By my halidom, quoth he,
Ye a great master are in your degree. Hubbard's Tale.

HALIMASSA.

H A L

HALLIMASS. n. f. [Palz and mafs.] The feast of All-fouls.

She came adorned hither like sweet May;
Sent back like balimafs, or shortest day. Shakspeare.
HALLITOUS. adj. [balitus, Latin.] Vaporious; fumous.

We speak of the atmosphere as of a peculiar thin and balituous liquor, much lighter than spirit of wine. Boyle.

HALL. n. f. [Pal, Saxon; halle, Dutch.]

1. A court of justice; as Westminster Hall.
O lost too soon in yonder house or hall. Pope.
2. A manour-house so called, because in it were held courts for the tenants.

Captain Sentry, my master's nephew, has taken possession of the hall house, and the whole estate. Addison.

3. The publick room of a corporation.

With expedition on the beadle call,
To summon all the company to the hall. Garrth.

4. The first large room of a house.

That light we see is burning in my hall. Shak.
Courtly is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'try halls
And courts of princes. Milton.

HALLELUJAH. n. f. [הללויה] Praise ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy faints

Unfained hall-lujabs to Thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthem, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hall-lujabs of the celestial choirs. Boyle.

HALLLOO. interj. [The original of this word is controversial: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from halter, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.
Some popular chief,

More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out. Dryden.

To HALLLOO. v. n. [haler, Fr.]

1. To cry as after the dogs.
A cry more tuneable
Was never hallo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn. Shakspeare.

2. To treat as in contempt.
Country folks halloed and houted after me, as the arrantest coward that ever shewed his shoulders to his enemy. Sidney.

To HALLLOO. v. a.

1. To encourage with shouts.
If, whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his hunting-horn and pole,
Though gout and age his speed detain,
Old John halloos his bounds again. Prior.

2. To chafe with shouts.
If I fly, Marcius,

Halloo me like a hare. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

3. To call or shout to.
When we have found the king, he that first lights on him.

Halloo the other. Shakspeare's King Lear.

To HALLLOW. v. a. [Palzian, Palz, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or halloo churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick refort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putterh fire to his neighbour's house, but yet to halloow the same with prayer, that he hopeth it shall not burn.

Is't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?

Sword, I will halloo thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead.

My prayers
Are not words duly halloow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet pray'rs and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakspeare Henry VIII.

H A L

God from work

Now resting, blest'd and halloow'd the seventh day,
As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in halloow'd temples burn. Dryden.

No satyr lurks within this halloow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granville.

2. To reverence as holy; halloow'd be thy name.
HALLUCINATION. n. f. [hallucinatio, Lat.] Er-rour; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the tran-scriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM. n. f. [pealm, Saxon.] Straw: pronounced hæum: which see.

HALLO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel of stagnating water, three halos, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows, concentrick to his body. Newton.

HALSENING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This ill halsening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scoffs of many. Carew.

HALSER. n. f. [from Palz, neck, and reel, a rope. It is now in marine pronunciation corrupted to baswer.] A rope less than a cable.

A beechen mast then in the hollow bafe
They hoisted, and with well-wreath'd halser hoise
Their white sails. Chapman.

No halser need to bind these vessels here,
Nor bearded anchors; for no storms they fear. Dryden.

To HALT. v. n. [Pealt, Saxon, lame; pealtan, to limp.]

1. To limp; to be lame.
And will she yet debate her eyes
On me, that halt and am mis-shapen thus? Shakspeare.

Thus inborn broils the factions would engage,
Or wars of exil'd heirs, or foreign rage,
'Till halting vengeance overtook our age. Dryden.

Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney's verse halts ill on Roman feet. Pope.

2. To stop in a march.
I was forced to halt in this perpendicular march. Addison.

3. To hesitate; to stand dubious.
How long halt ye between two opinions? Kin.

4. To fail; to faulter.
Here's a paper written in his hand;
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion'd to Beatrice. Shakspeare.

All my familiars watched for my halting, taying, peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him. Jeremiab.

HALT. adj. [from the verb.] Lame; crippled.
Bring in hither the poor, the maimed, the halt,
and the blind. Luke.

HALT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of limping; the manner of limping.

2. [Alte, French.] A stop in a march.
The heav'nly bands
Down from a sky of jasper lighted now
In Paradise, and on a hill made halt. Milton.

Scouts each coast light armed scour
Each quarter to descry the distant foe,
Where lodg'd, or whither fled, or if for fight
In motion, or in halt. Milton.

Without any halt they marched between the two armies. Clarendon.

H A M

He might have made a halt 'till his foot and attillery came up to him. Clarendon.

HALTER. n. f. [from halt.] He who limps.

HALTER. n. f. [Dealtze, Saxon, from Palz, the neck.]

1. A rope to hang malefactors.
He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halter on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shakspeare.

They were to die by the sword if they stood upon defence, and by the halter if they yielded; wherefore they made choice to die rather as soldiers than as dogs. Hayward.

Were I a drowfy judge, whose dismal note
Disgorgeth halter, as a juggler's throat
Doth ribbands. Cleaveland.

He gets renown, who, to the halter near,
But narrowly escapes, and buys it dear. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A cord; a strong string.
Whom neither halter binds nor burthens charge. Sandys.

To HALTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a cord; to catch in a noose.

He might have employed his time in the frivolous delights of catching moles and haltering frogs. Atterbury.

To HALVE. v. a. [from half, halves.] To divide into two parts.

HALVES. interj. [from half, halves, being the plural.] An expression by which any one lays claim to an equal share.

Have you not seen how the divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb?
But when the twin cries halves she quits the first. Cleaveland.

HAM. whether initial or final, is no other than the Saxon ham, a house, farm, or village. Gibson's Camden.

HAM. n. f. [Pam, Saxon; hamme, Dutch.]

1. The hip; the hinder part of the articulation of the thigh with the knee.

The ham was much relaxed; but there was some contraction remaining. Wifeman.

2. The thigh of a hog salted.
Who has not learn'd, fresh sturgeon and ham
pye

Are no rewards for want of infamy? Pope.

To HAMBLE. v. n. [from ham.] To cut the fi-news of the thigh; to hamstring.

HAME. n. f. [Pama, Saxon.] The collar by which a horse draws in a waggon.

HAMLET. n. f. [Pam, Saxon, and let, the diminutive termination.] A small village.

Within the self-same lordship, parish, or hamlet, lands have divers degrees of value. Bacon.

He pitch'd upon the plain
His mighty camp, and, when the day return'd,
The country wasted and the hamlets burn'd. Dryden.

HAMMER. n. f. [Pamep, Saxon; hammer, Danish.]

1. The instrument consisting of a long handle and heavy head, with which any thing is forged or driven.

The armourers,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakspeare.

The stuff will not work well with a hammer. Bacon.

It is broken not without many blows, and will break the best anvils and hammers of iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Every morning he rises fresh to his hammer and his anvil. South.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke. Dryden's Juvenal.

name an invention by this witercraft, and picture it accordingly. Candem.
- Some spirits, by whom they were stirred and guided in the name of the people, hammer'd up the articles. Hayward.
- To HAMMER, v. n.
1. To work; to be busy: in contempt.
Nor need it thou much importune me to that,
Whereon this month I have been hammering. Shakespeare.
- I have been studying how to compare
This prison where I live unto the world;
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it; yet I'll hammer on't. Shakespeare.
2. To be in agitation.
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand;
Blood and revenge are hammering in my head. Shakespeare.

with much hammering on it. Moxon.
- HAMMOCK, n. f. [Pamaca, Saxon.] A swinging bed.
- Prince Maurice of Vassau, who had been accustomed to hammocks, used them all his life. Temp.
- HAMPER, n. f. [Supposed by Minsheu to be contracted from band panier; but banperium appears to have been a word long in use, whence banper, banper.] A large basket for carriage.
- What powdered wigs! what flames and darts!
What banpers full of bleeding hearts; Swift.
7. HAMPER, v. a. [The original of this word, in its present meaning, is uncertain: Junius observes that banplyns in Teutonic is a quarrel:
others imagine that banper or banaper, being the treasury to which fines are paid, to banper, which is commonly applied to the law, means originally to fine.]
1. To shackle: to entangle, as in chains or nets.
O loose this frame, this knot of man untie!
That my free soul may use her wing,
Which now is pinion'd with mortality,
As an entangl'd, banper'd thing. Herbert.
- We shall find such engines to assail,
And banper thee, as thou shalt come of force. Milton.
- What was it but a lion banper'd in a net!
L'Estrange.
- Wear under vizard-masks their talents,
And mother wits before their gallants;
Until they're banper'd in the nooze,
Too fast to dream of breaking loose. Hudibras.
- They banper and entangle our souls, and hinder their flight upwards. Tillotson.
2. To ensnare; to inveigle; to catch with allurements.
She'll banper thee, and dandle thee like a baby. Shakespeare.

she, by a moderate band, from time to time reap
the like. Bacon.
15. Workmanship; power or act of manufacturing or making.
An intelligent being, coming out of the bands of infinite perfection, with an aversion or even indifferency to be reunited with its Author, the source of its utmost felicity, is such a shock and deformity in the beautiful analogy of things, as is not consistent with finite wisdom and perfection. Cheyne.
16. Manner of acting or performing.
The matter saw the madness rise;
His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes;
And while he heav'n and earth defy'd,
Chang'd his band, and check'd his pride. Dryden.
17. Agency; part in action.
God must have set a more than ordinary esteem upon that which David was not thought fit to have an band in. South.
18. The act of giving or presenting.
Let Tamer dress the meat in my sight, that I may eat it at her band. 2 Sam. xiii. 5.
- To-night the poet's advocate I stand,
And he deserves the favour at my band. Addison.
19. Act of receiving any thing ready to one's hand, when it only waits to be taken.
His power reaches no farther than to compound and divide the materials that are made to his band;
but can do nothing towards the making or destroying one atom of what is already in being. Locke.
- Many, whose greatness and fortune were not made to their bands, had sufficient qualifications and opportunities of rising to these high posts. Addison.
20. Care; necessity of managing.
Jupiter had a farm a long time upon his bands, for want of a tenant to come up to his price. L'Estrange.

The republic that fell under the subjection of the duke of Florence, still retains many bankerings after its ancient liberty.

HANT for has not, or have not.
That roguish leer of your's makes a pretty woman's heart ake: you ban't that simper about the mouth for nothing. Addison.

HAP, n. s. [anap, in Welch, is misfortune.]

1. Chance; fortune.
Whether art it were, or heedless hap,
As through the flow'ring forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap.

And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did envelop. Spenser.

2. That which happens by chance or fortune.

Curst be good haps, and curst be they that build their hopes on haps, and do not make despair For all these certain blows the surest shield. Sidney.

To have ejected whatsoever that church doth make account of, without any other crime than that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, might haply have pleased some few men, who, having begun such a course themselves, must be glad to see their example followed. Hooker.

Things casual do vary, and that which a man doth but chance to think well of cannot still have the like hap. Hooker.

Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, more than the victory of others got by good fortune. Knolles.

A fox had the hap to fall into the walk of a lion. L'Estrange.

3. Accident; casual event; misfortune.

Nor feared the among the bands to stray
Of armed men; for often had she seen
The tragick end of many a bloody fray:
Her life had full of haps and hazards been. Fairfax.

HAP-HAZARD, n. s. Chance; accident; perhaps originally hap hazard.

The former of these is the most sure and infallible way; but so hard that all shun it, and rather walk as men do in the dark by hap hazard, than tread so long and intricate mazes for knowledge's sake. Hooker.

We live at hap hazard, and without any insight into causes and effects. L'Estrange.

We take our principles at hap hazard upon trust, and then believe a whole system, upon a presumption that they are true. Locke.

TO HAP, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To happen; to have the casual consequence.
It will be too late to gather ships or soldiers, which may need to be presently employed, and whose want may hap to hazard a kingdom.

2. To come by chance; to befall casually.

HAPPINESS, n. s. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.

Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.

Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.

Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.

The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.

2. Good luck; good fortune.

3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words. Denham.

Some beauties yet no precepts can declare;
For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.

4. To make insensible; to stupify.
 Religion sets before us not the example of a stupid Stoick, who had by obstinate principles hardened himself against all sense of pain; but an example of a man like ourselves, that had a tender sense of the least suffering, and yet patiently endured the greatest. Tillotson.

Years have not yet hardened me, and I have an addition of weight on my spirits since we lost him. Swift to Pope.

H A R

5. To make firm; to endue with constancy.
 Then should I yet have comfort? yea, I would harden myself in sorrow. Job.

One raises the soul, and hardens it to virtue; the other softens it again, and unbends it into vice. Dryden.

HARDENER, n. f. [from harden.] One that makes any thing hard.

HARDFAVOUR'D, adj. [hard and favour.] Coarse of feature; harsh of countenance.

 A satire and the gentry buy!
 While my hardlabour'd poem pines,
 Unfold upon the printer's lines. Swift.

HARDLY, adv. [from hard.]
 1. With difficulty; not easily.

Touching things which generally are received,
 although in themselves they be most certain, yet, because men presume them granted of all, we are hardly able to bring such proof of their certainty as may satisfy gainers, when suddenly and besides expectation they require the fame at our hands. Hooker.

There are but a few, and they endued with great ripeness of wit and judgment, free from all such affairs as might trouble their meditations, instructed in the sharpest and subtlest points of learning; who have, and that very hardly, been able to find out but only the immortality of the soul. Hooker.

God hath delivered a law as sharp as the two-edged sword, piercing the very closest and most unsearchable corners of the heart, which the law of nature can hardly, human laws by no means, possibly reach unto. Hooker.

HARLEQUIN. n. f. [This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a busy buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented Mr. Harley's house, whom his friends called Harlequin, little Harley. Tree.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace;
a Jack-pudding; a zani.

The joy of a king for a victory must not be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistress. Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known,
Though his best part long since was done,
Still on the stage desires to tarry;

And he who play'd the harlequin,
After the jest still loads the scene,
Unwilling to retire, though weary. Prior.

HARPY, n. f. [from harpys, Latin; harpis, Fr.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and four long claws, very filthy creatures; which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured. Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle. Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pigmies, rather than hold three words conference with this harpy. Shakespeare.

HARQUEBUSS, n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A handgun.

HARQUEBUSSIER, n. f. [from harquebuse.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank. Kneller.

HARRIDAN, n. f. [corrupted from haridilla, a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed strumpet.

She just endur'd the Winter she began, And in four months a batter'd harridan; Rowe.

Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrunk,
To bawd for others, and go share with punk.

Swift.

HARROW. n. f. [harrou, French; harre, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the feed.

The land with daily care

Is exercis'd, and with an iron war

Of rakes and harrows.

Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.

Mortimer.

To HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

Not only thy peafon, but also thy beans.

Tuff.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?

Job.

Let the Volcians

Plow Rome, and harrow Italy.

Shakespeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word

Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.

Shakespeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd, My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;

Or hear me groaning on the rending rack.

Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners; and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [From Persian, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy frowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre.

Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day Didst make thy triumph over death and sin;

And having harrow'd hell, didst bring away Captivity thence captive, us to win.

Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion. [This should rather be written barry, barer, French.]

Most like: it harrows me with fear and wonder.

Shakespeare.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care.

Milton.

HARROW interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow low out and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,

To see my lord so deadly damnify'd?

Spenser.

HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk.

Ainsworth.

To HARROW. v. a. [harer, Fr.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.

—I repent me much

That I so harry'd him.

Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress: as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away: as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See To HARROW.

HARSH. adj. [harvische, German; Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly four.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;

Some forts, when old, continue brisk and fine:

So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought t' appear.

Denham.

Sweet, bitter, four, harsh and falt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes.

Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fierceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries.

Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volcians ears,

And harsh in found to thine.

Shakespeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;

But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line.

Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling tedious, and their pronunciation harsh.

Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now

With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,

To fervile duties.

Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wife man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty.

Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty.

Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou canst not praise.

Prior.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

Auterbury.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points, or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth.

Boyle.

5. Unpleasant; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher charm'd.

Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd.

Milton.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature.

Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould found harshly in her ears.

Shakespeare.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating so harshly all his days of quiet

With turbulent and dangerous lunacy.

Shakespeare.

The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung.

Dryden.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard:
the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts: for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness.

Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be ever refined into perfect harmony like the Italian.

Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound?

Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense.

Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch.

Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Shakespeare.

Do comfort and not burn.

HART. n. f. [peopt, Saxon.] A he-deer of the large kind; the male of the roe.

Shakespeare.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.

Shakespeare.

The deer

And fearful harts do wander every where

Amidst the dogs.

May's Virgil.

HARTSHORN. n. f.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies: it is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water.

Hill.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are observable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn.

Woodw.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb.

Linnaeus.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant: A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina, Lat.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe.

Miller.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed.

Mortimer.

HARTWORT. n. f. [ordylum, Latin.] An umbelliferous plant.

Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [hæppest, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn:

As it ebbs, the seedman

Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest.

Shakespeare.

With harvest work he is worse than in Spring.

L'Estrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered and inned.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.

Shakespeare.

When the father is too fondly kind,

Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find.

Dryden.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet.

Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. f.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having inned the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;

Come, my boys, come,

Come, my boys, come,

And merrily roar out harvest-home.

Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the shearing-day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay.

Dryden.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoo's rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home.

Shakespeare.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper at the harvest.

Grant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do.

Taylor.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.] A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvestman that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire.

Shakespeare.

To HASH. v. n. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces, and mingle.

He rais'd his arm

Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,

As if he meant to hash her quick.

Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, tho' some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order, and politeness; but hashed up in haste?

Garth.

HASK.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a cafe or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes' hask. Spenser.

HASLET. n. f. [haslet, hlandick, a bundle;
HASLET. f. basleret, basleran, baslier, French.]
The heart, liver, and lights of a hog, with the windpipe and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [Dæpp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called haspe.] A clasp folded over a staple, fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

TO HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HASSOCK. n. f. [hasseck, German. Skinner.]

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church. He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit; it is therefore probable that hassock and hasp are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [basie, Fr. basle, Dutch.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!

But O, thou wilt not, canst not spare!

Haste hath never time to hear. Crafter.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,

Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;

But as the present, so the last age writ;

In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.

The wretched father, running to their aid

With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I laid in my haste, all men are liars. Psalms.

TO HASTE. v. n. [basier, French; basien,

TO HASTEN. f. Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedily.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jeremiah.

2. To move with swiftness; eagerness; or hurry.

He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you go? Shakespeare.

They were troubled and hasted away. Psalms.

All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a post that hasted by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,

Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the prince, without delay,

Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste

Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.

Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court

Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

TO HASTE. v. a. To push forward; to urge

TO HASTEN. f. on; to precipitate; to drive to a swifter pace.

Let it be so hasted, that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. Shakespeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms is past:

To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.

Each fees his lamp with diff'rent lustre crown'd;

Each knows his course with diff'rent periods

bound;

And in his passage through the liquid space,

Nor hastens, nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HASTENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HASTILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice, that called loud and clear,

Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,

You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.

The next to danger, hot pursu'd by fate,

Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.

2. Rashly; precipitately.

Without considering consequences, we hastily engaged in a war which hath cost us sixty millions. Swift.

3. Passionately; with vehemence.

HASTINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilus. Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness

to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evil. Hosker.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HASTINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Mortimer.

HASTY. adj. [hastif, Fr. from haste; hastig,

Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

Is this the counsel that we two have shar'd,

The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent,

When we have chid the hasty footed time

For parting us! Shakespeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is flow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth

folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words?

There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Ecc. v. 2.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty

fruit before the Summer. Isaiah.

HASTY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

Sure hasty-pudding is thy chiefest dith,

With bullock's liver, or some stinking fish. Dorset.

HAT. n. f. [hæt, Saxon; hatt, German.] A cover for the head.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum bat, and her muffler too. Shakespeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made

Your holy bat be stamp'd on the king's coin. Shakespeare.

His bat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,

And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd;

His bat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,

And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling rod. Dryden.

HAT-BAND. n. f. [bat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had bats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like batbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see

His coat and batband shew his quality. Dryden.

HAT-CASE. n. f. [bat and case.] A flight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

TO HATCH. v. a. [becken, German, as Skinner thinks, from bechen, egben, egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,

And hatches plenty for the ensuing Spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens, and shores,

Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs, than foam

Burking with kindly rupture, forth disclos'd

Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to sit. Ray.

Others hatch their eggs and tend the birth, 'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hosker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [From hacher, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms,

his blood appearing fresh,

Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatcht. Chapman.

Such as Agamemnon and the hand of Greece

Should hold up high in brais; and such again

As venerable Nestor, hatcht in silver,

Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears

To his experienc'd tongue. Shakespeare.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden.

TO HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in the state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

2. To be in a state of advance towards effect.

HATCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A brood excluded from the egg.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his foul,

O'er which his melancholy fits on brood;

And, I do doubt, the hatch and the disclosure

Will be some danger. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. [Hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with opening over it: perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little from the right,

in at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shakespeare.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,

There shalt thou find the mariners asleep

Under the hatches. Shakespeare's Tempest.

There she's hid;

The mariners all under hatches stow'd. Shakespeare.

So seas, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,

Affault the sides; and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;

The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,

For shelter there the trembling shadow bent,

And skip'd and sculk'd 'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt, and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Locke.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

TO HATCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, German.] To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

The asbestos, mentioned by Kircher in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling,

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon.

The gods have placed labour before virtue.

This observation we have made on man. Addif. Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addif. These torments have already taken root in them.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practise it.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you; or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as more elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him.

He that will cope with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation? have at it with you.

I never was out at a mad frolic, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word.

HA'VEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre, Fr.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships. Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years.

Order for sea is given:

They have put forth the haven. After an hour and an half sailing, we entered into a good haven, being the port of a fair city.

The queen beheld, as soon as day appear'd, The navy under sail, the haven clear'd.

We may be shipwreck'd by her breath: Love favour'd once with that sweet gale, Doubles his haste, and fills his sail, 'Till he arrive, where the must prove The haven, or the rock of love.

2. A shelter; an asylum.

All places, that the eye of Heaven visits, Are to a wife man ports and happy havens.

HA'VENER. n. f. [from haven.] An overseer of a port.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers, as receiver, havener, and customer.

HA'VER. n. f. [from have.] Possessor; holder. Valour is the chiefest virtue, and Mott dignifies the have.

HA'VER is a common word in the northern countries for oats; as, have bread for oaten bread: perhaps properly aven, from avena, Latin.

When you would anneal, take a blue stone, such as they make have or oat cakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron.

HAUGHT. adj. [haute, French.]

1. Haughty; insolent; proud; contemptuous; arrogant. Obsolete.

The proud insulting queen, With Clifford and the haught Northumberland, Have wrought the easy melting king like wax.

No lord of thine, thou haught insulting man; Nor no man's lord.

2. High; proudly; magnanimous.

His courage haught, Desir'd of foreign foemen to be known, And far abroad for strange adventures fought.

HAUGHTILY. adv. [from haughty.] Proudly; arrogantly; contemptuously.

HAUGHTINESS. n. f. [from haughty.] Pride; arrogance; the quality of being haughty.

By the head we make known our supplications, our threatnings, our mildness, our haughtiness, our love, and our hatred.

HAUGHTY. adj. [haute, French.]

1. Proud; lofty; insolent; arrogant; contemptuous.

His wife, being a woman of a haughty and imperious nature, and of a wit superior to his, quickly resented the disrespect she received from him.

I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage, And haughty souls, that mov'd with mutual hate, In fighting fields pursu'd and found their fate.

2. Proudly great.

Our vanquish'd wills that pleasing force obey: Her goodness takes our liberty away;

And haughty Britain yields to arbitrary sway. Prior. 3. Bold; adventurous; of high hazard. Obsolete.

Who now shall give me words and found Equal unto this haughty enterprise?

Or who shall lend me wings, with which from ground

My lowly verse may loftily arise?

HA'VE. n. f. [from have.]

1. Possession; estate; fortune.

My having is not much;

I'll make division of my present with you:

Hold, there's half my coffer.

2. The act or state of possessing.

Of the one side was alledged the having a picture, which the other wanted; of the other side, the first striking the shield.

Thou art not for the fashion of these times, Where none will sweat but for promotion; And having that, do choke their service up, Even with the having.

3. Behaviour; regularity. This is still retained in the Scottish dialect. It may possibly be the meaning here.

The gentleman is of no having; he kept company with the wild prince and Poinz: he is of too high a region; he knows too much.

HA'VIOUR. n. f. [for behaviour.] Conduct; manners. Not used.

Their ill *havio*ur garres men mislay Both of their doctrines and their fay.

To HAUL. v. a. [hale, French, to draw.] To pull; to draw; to drag by violence. A word which, applied to things, implies violence; and, to persons, awkwardness or rudeness. This word is liberally exemplified in bale; etymology is regarded in bale, and pronunciation in haul.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts, Is in safe durance and contagious prison, Haul'd thither by mechanic dirty hands.

The youth with songs and rhimes, Some dance, some haul the rope.

Some the wheels prepare, And fasten to the horses feet; the rest With cables haul along th' unwieldy beast.

In his grandeur he naturally chafes to haul up others after him whose accomplishments must resemble his own.

Thither they bent, and haul'd their ships to land;

The crooked keel divides the yellow sand. Rump loving mifs

Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Haul. n. f. [from the verb.] Pull; violence in dragging.

The leap, the flap, the haul.

The stone, which the builders refused, is become the headstone. Psalms, cxviii. 24.

HEADSTRONG, adj. [head and strong.] Unrestrained; violent; ungovernable; resolute to run his own way: as a horse whose head cannot be held in.

An example, for beadstrong and inconsiderate zeal, no less fearful than Achitophel for proud and irreligious wisdom. Hooker.

How now, my beadstrong! where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent the sin Of disobedient opposition.

Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

But such a beadstrong potent fault it is, That it but mocks reproof.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

He ill aspires to rule

Cities of men or beadstrong multitudes,

Subject himself to anarchy within. Milton.

There's no opposing the torrent of a beadstrong multitude. L'Estrange.

Now let the beadstrong boy my will controul: Virtue's no slave of man; no sex confines the soul:

I, for myself, th' imperial feat will gain,

And he shall wait my leisure for his reign. Dryden.

Your father's folly took a beadstrong course;

But I'll rule yours, and teach you love by force. Dryden.

Can we forget how the mad beadstrong rout

Defy'd their prince to arms, nor made account

Of faith or duty, or allegiance sworn? Phillips.

I'll try if yet I can reduce to reason

This beadstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato. Addison.

You will be both judge and party: I am sorry thou discoverest so much of thy beadstrong humour. Arbutnot.

HEADWORKMAN. n. f. [head work and man.] and stamps. Swift.

HEADY. adj. [from head.]

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.

Take pity of your town and of your people,

While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds

Of beady murder, spoil and villainy. Shakespeare.

I am advised what I say:

Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,

Nor, beady rash, provok'd with raging ire;

Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. Shakespeare.

I'll forbear,

And am fall'n out with my more beady will,

To take the indispos'd and sickly fit

For the found man. Shakespeare.

Wives, the readiest helps

To betray beady husbands, rob the easy. B. Jonson.

Those only are regarded who are true to their party; and all the talent required is to be hot, to be beady, to be violent on one side or other. Temp.

Men, naturally warm and beady, are transported with the greatest flush of good-nature. Addison.

2. Apt to affect the head.

I was entertained with a sort of wine which was very beady, but otherwise seemed to be sack. Boyle.

Since hearty beef and mutton will not do,

Here's julep-dance, ptisan of song and show:

Give you strong sense, the liquor is too beady;

You're come to farce, that's asses milk, already. Dryden.

Flow, Welfed! flow, like thine inspirer, beer;

Heady, not strong; and foaming, though not full. Pope.

3. Violent; impetuous.

Never came reformation in a flood

With such a beady current scow'ring faults;

Nor ever hydra-headed wilfulness

So soon did lose his feat. Shakespeare.

Lies slumbering fullen on the white abyss. Thomson.
To HEAP. v. n. [Dýnan, Saxon; booven, Dut.]
1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external air, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum: in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum; so that, according to the various reflections of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence.
Holder.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes, nor hear with their own ears. Temple.

2. To listen; to hearken to; as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam heard,
Well-pleas'd but answer'd not. Milton.

Great laughter was in heav'n,
And looking down, to see the hubbub strange,
And hear the din. Milton.

3. To be told; to have an account: with of.
I have heard by many of this man. Acts, ix. 13.
I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismay'd at the seeing of it. Isaiab.

Hear of such a crime

As tragic poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd. Tate's Juvenal.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

To HEAR. v. a.

1. perceive by the ear.
The trumpeters and fingers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord. 2 Chron. v. 13.
And sure he heard, but he would not hear.
Dryden.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.
He sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. Acts, xxiv. 24.

I must beg the forbearance of censure, 'till I have been heard out in the sequel of this discourse.
Locke.

3. To attend; to listen to; to obey.
A scorn'd hearer not rebuke. Proverbs.

Deut. i. 16.

6. To attend, as to one speaking.
On earth

Who against faith or conscience can be heard Infallible? Milton.

7. To acknowledge a title. A Latin phrase.
Or hear'st thou rather pure ethereal stream,
Whose fountain who shall tell? Milton.

H E A

Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth? Prior.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial; as beardbear, a glorious keeper: sometimes final, as cynbeard, a royal keeper. Gibson's Camden. It is now written beard: as, cowbeard, a cowkeeper; Dýnt, Saxon.

HEARER. n. f. [from hear.]

1. One who hears.
And so was she dull'd withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Sidney.

St. John and St. Matthew, which have recorded these sermons, heard them; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees.
Hooker.

Words, be they never so few, are too many,
when they benefit not the hearer. Hooker.

The hearers will shed tears,
And say, Alas! it was a piteous deed! Shakespeare.

Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.
Shakespeare.

2. One who attends doctrine or discourse orally delivered by another; as, the hearers of the gospel.

3. One of a collected audience.
Plays in themselves have neither hopes nor fears;

Their fate is only in their hearers ears. Ben Jonson.

Her hearers had no share
In all she spoke, except to stare. Swift.

HEARING. n. f. [from hear.]

1. The sense by which sounds are perceived.
Bees are called with sound upon hears, and therefore they have hearing. Bacon's Natural Hist.

2. Audience.
The French ambassador upon that instant
Crav'd audience; and the hour, I think, is come
To give him hearing. Shakespeare.

3. Judicial trial.
Agrippa and Burnice entered into the place of hearing. Acts.

The readers are the jury to decide according to the merits of the cause, or to bring it to another hearing before some other court. Dryden.

Those of different principles may be betrayed to give you a fair hearing, and to know what you have to say for yourself. Addison.

4. Note by the ear; reach of hearing.
If we profess as Peter did, that we love the Lord, and profess it in the hearing of men; charity is prone to hear all things, and therefore charitable men are likely to think we do so. Hooker.

In our hearing the king charged thee, beware that none touch Absalom. 2 Sam. xviii. 12.

You have been talked of since your travels much,

And that in Hamlet's hearing, for a quality
Wherein they say you shine. Shakespeare.

The fox had the good luck to be within hearing.
L'Estrange.

To HEARKEN. v. n. [Peapeman, Saxon.]

1. To listen; to listen eagerly or curiously.
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from access of suitors.
Shakespeare.

He hearkens after prophecies and dreams. Shakespeare.

They do me too much injury,
That ever said I hearken'd for your death:
If it were so, I might have let alone
Th' insulting hand of Douglas over you. Shakespeare.

The gaping three-mouth'd dog forgets to snarl;
The furies hearken, and their snakes uncurl. Dryden.

Louder, and yet more loud, I hear the alarms
Of human cries:

I mount the terraces, thence the town survey,
And hearken what the fruitless sounds convey.
Dryden.

He who makes much necessary, will want much; and, wearied with the difficulty of the attainment, will hearken after any expedient that offers to shorten his way to it. Rogers.

2. To attend; to pay regard.
Hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor. Numb.

Those who put passion into the place of reason, neither use their own, nor hearken to the other people's reason, any farther than it suits their humour. Locke.

H E A

There's not a blessing individuals find,
But some way leans and hearkens to the kind. Pope.

HEARKENER. n. f. [from hearken.] Listener;
one that hearkens.

HEARSAY. n. f. [bear and say.] Report; rumour; what is not known otherwise than by account from others.

For prey these shepherds two he took,
Whose metal stiff he knew he could not bend
With hearsay pictures, or a window look. Sidney.

He affirms by hearsay, that some giants faved themselves upon the mountain Baris in Armenia.
Raleigh's History.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, publish every blot in his life, and depend upon hearsay to defame him. Addison.

HEARSE. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]

1. A carriage in which the dead are conveyed to the grave.

2. A temporary monument set over a grave.

lation propels the blood through the course of circulation, and is therefore considered as the source of vital motion.

2. It is supposed in popular language to be the seat sometimes of courage, sometimes of affection, sometimes of honesty, or baseness.

He with providence and courage so pass'd over all, that the mother took such pitiful grief at it, that her heart brake withal, and she died. Sidney.

Thou wouldst have left thy dearest heart blood
there,

Rather than made that savage duke thine heir,
And disinherited thine only son. Shakespeare.

Snakes, in my heart blood warm'd, that sting my heart. Shakespeare.

Our battle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good.
Shakespeare.

I thank you for my venison, master Shallow.
—Master Page, much good do it your good heart.
Shakespeare.

But since the brain doth lodge the powers of sense,

How makes it in the heart those passions spring?
—The mutual love, the kind intelligence
'Twixt heart and brain, this sympathy doth bring.
Davies.

We all set our hearts at rest, since whatever comes from above is for the best. L'Estrange.

The only true zeal is that which is guided by a good light in the head, and that which consists of good and innocent affections in the heart. Spratt.

Prest with heart corroding grief and years,
To the gay court a rural shed prefers. Pope.

3. The chief part; the vital part; the vigorous or efficacious part.

Barley being steeped in water, and turned upon a dry floor, will sprout half an inch; and, if it be let alone, much more, until the heart be out.
Bacon.

4. The inner part of any thing.
Some Englishmen did with great danger pass by water into the heart of the country.

Ablet's Description of the World.

The king's forces are employed in appeasing disorders more near the heart of the kingdom.

Generally the inside or heart of trees is harder than the outward parts. Boyle.

Here in the heart of all the town I'll stay,
And timely succour, where it wants convey.

hood. Sidney.

There did other like unhappy accidents happen out of England, which gave heart and good opportunity to them to regain their old possessions.

Wide was the wound; and a large lukewarm flood,
Red as the rose, thence gushed grievously,
That when the painim spy'd the streaming
blood,
Gave him great heart and hope of victory.

Eve, recov'ring heart, reply'd.
Having left that city well provided, and in good heart, his majesty removed with his little army to Bewdly.

Finding that it did them no hurt, they took heart upon't, went up to't, and viewed it.

The expelled nations take heart, and when they fly from one country invade another.

7. Seat of love.
Ah! what avails it me the flocks to keep,
Who lost my heart while I preserv'd my sheep!

8. Affection; inclination.
Joah perceived that the king's heart was towards Abalom.

Means how to feel, and learn each other's heart,
By th' abbot's skill of Westminster is found.

Nor set thy heart,
Thus over-fond, on that which is not thine.

'Tis well to be tender; but to set the heart too much upon any thing, is what we cannot justify.

A friend makes me a feast, and sets all before me; but I set my heart upon one dish alone, and if that happen to be thrown down, I scorn all the rest.

Then mixing pow'rful herbs with magick art,
She chang'd his form who could not change his heart.

What did I not, her stubborn heart to gain?
But all my vows were answer'd with disdain.

9. Memory; though South seems to distinguish.

Whatsoever was attained to, concerning God and his working in nature, the fame was delivered over by heart and tradition from wise men to a posterity equally zealous.

We call the committing of a thing to memory the getting it by heart; for it is the memory that must transmit it to the heart; and it is in vain to expect that the heart should keep its hold of any truth, when the memory has let it go.

Shall I in London act this idle part?
Composing songs for fools to get by heart.

10. Good-will; ardour of zeal. To take to heart any thing, is to be zealous or solicitous or ardent about it.

If he take not their causes to heart, how should there be but in them frozen coldness, when his affections seem benumbed, from whom theirs should take fire?

If he would take the business to heart, and deal in it effectually, it would succeed well.

The lady marchioness of Hertford engaged her husband to take this business to heart.

Amongst those, who took it most to heart, Sir
John Stawel was the chief.

Every prudent and honest man would join himself to that side which had the good of their country most at heart.

Learned men have been now a long time searching after the happy country from which our first parents were exiled: if they can find it, with all my heart.

I would not be sorry to find the Presbyterians mistaken in this point, which they have most at heart.

What I have most at heart is, that some method should be thought on for ascertaining and fixing our language.

11. Passions; anxiety; concern.
Set your heart at rest;

The fairy land buys not the child of me.
12. Secret thoughts; recesses of the mind.

Michal saw king David leaping and dancing before the Lord, and she despised him in her heart.

The next generation will in tongue and heart, and every way else, become English; so as there will be no difference or distinction, but the Irish sea, betwixt us.

Thou fawest the contradiction between my heart and hand.

Would you have him open his heart to you, and ask your advice, you must begin to do so with him first.

Men, some to pleasure, some to business take:
But every woman is, at heart, a rake.

13. Disposition of mind.
Doing all things with go pretty a grace, that it seemed ignorance could not make him do amiss, because he had a heart to do well.

14. The heart is considered as the seat of tenderness: a hard heart therefore is cruelty.

I've seen thee stern, and thou hast oft beheld Heart hardening spectacles.

Such iron hearts we are, and such
The base barbarity of human kind.

15. To find in the HEART. To be not wholly averse.

For my breaking the laws of friendship with you, I could find in my heart to ask you pardon for it, but that your now handling of me gives me reason to confirm my former dealing.

16. Secret meaning; hidden intention.
I will on with my speech in your praise,
And then shew you the heart of my message.

17. Conscience; sense of good or ill.
Every man's heart and conscience doth in good or evil, even secretly committed, and known to none but itself, either like or disallow itself.

18. Strength; power; vigour; efficacy.
Try whether leaves of trees, swept together, with some chalk and dung mixed, to give them more heart, would not make a good compost.

That the spent earth may gather heart again,
And, better'd by cessation, bear the grain.

Care must be taken not to plow ground out of heart, because if 'tis in heart, it may be improved by man again.

19. Utmost degree.
This gay charm,
Like a right gipsy, hath, at fast and loose,
Regu'd me to the very heart of loss.

20. Life. For my heart seems sometimes to fignify, if life was at stake; and sometimes for tenderness.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it.

I gave it to a youth,
A prating boy, that begg'd it as a fee:
I could not for my heart deny it him.

Profoundly skill'd in the black art,
As English Merlin for his heart.

21. It is much used in composition for mind, or affection.

HEART-ACH. n. f. [heart and ach.] Sorrow;
pang; anguish of mind.

To die—to sleep—
No more; and, by a sleep, to say we end
The heart-ach, and the thousand natural shocks
That flesh is heir to.

HEART-BREAK. n. f. [heart and break.] Overpowering sorrow.

Better a little chiding than a great deal of heart- break.

woman's curls, supposed to break the heart of all her lovers.

Like Samson's heart-breakers, it grew
In time to make a nation rue.

HEART-BREAKING. adj. Overpowering with fellow.

Those piteous plaints and sorrowful sad time,
Which late you poured forth, as ye did sit Beside the silver springs of Helicone,
Making your musick of heart-breaking mone.

HEART-BREAKING. n. f. Overpowering grief.
What greater heart-breaking and confusion can there be to one, than to have all his secret faults laid open, and the sentence of condemnation passed upon him?

HEART-BURNED. adj. [heart and burn.] Having the heart inflamed.

How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burned an hour after.

HEART-BURNING. n. f. [heart and burn.]
1. Pain at the stomach, commonly from an acid humour.

Fine clean chalk is one of the most noble aborbents, and powerfully corrects and subdues the acid humours in the stomach: this property renders it very serviceable in the cardialgia, or heart- burning.

2. Discontent; secret enmity.
In great changes, when right of inheritance is broke, there will remain much heart-burning and discontent among the meaner people.

HEART-DEAR. adj. Sincerely beloved.
The time was, father, that you broke your word,

When you were more endear'd to it than now;
When your own Percy, when my heart-dear Harry,
Threw many a northward look to see his father
Bring up his pow'r; but he did long in vain!

HEART-EASE. n. f. Quiet; tranquillity.
What infinite heart-ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy?

HEART-EASING. adj. Giving quiet.
But come, thou goddess fair and free,
In heav'n y'clep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing mirth.

HEART-ELT. adj. Felt in the conscience.
What nothing earthly gives, or can destroy,
The soul's calm sun-shine, and the heart-elt joy,
Is virtue's prize.

fection.

And let fair Venus, that is queen of love,
With her heart-quelling son, upon you smile.

HEART-RENDING. adj. Killing with anguish.
Heart-rending news, and dreadful to those few
Who her resemble, and her steps pursue:
That death should licence have to rage among
The fair, the wife, the virtuous, and the young!

HEART-ROBBING. adj. Ecstatick; depriving of thought. Obsolete.

Sweet is thy virtue, as thyself sweet art;
For when on me thou shinedst, late in sadness,
A melting pleasure ran through every part,
And me revived with heart-robbing gladness.

HEART-SICK. adj.
1. Pained in mind.

If we be heart-sick, or afflicted with an uncertain soul, then we are true desirers of relief and mercy.

2. Mortally ill: hurt in the heart.
Good Romeo, hide thyself.

The ground one year at rest; forget not then
 With richest dung to hearten it again. May's Virgil.

HEARTH. n. f. The pavement of a room on which a fire is made; the ground under the chimney.

Hoop'd out of Rome: now this extremity
 Hath brought me to this hearth. Shakespeare.

Cricketer, to Windfor chimneys shalt thou leap,
 Where thou find'st fires unrak'd, and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bluberry. Shakespeare.

Good luck befriend thee, son; for at thy birth
 The fairy ladies danc'd upon the hearth. Milton.

The vanquish'd fires withdraw from every place;

Or, full with feeding, sink into a sleep:
 Each household genius shews again its face,

And from the hearths the little larks creep. Dryden.

HEARTILY. adv. [from hearty.]

1. From the heart; fully.

I bear no malice for my death;
 But those that fought it, I could wish more Christians;

Be what they will, I heartily forgive them. Shakespeare.

If to be sad is to be wise,
 I do most heartily despise

Whatever Socrates has said,
 Or Tully writ, or Wanley read. Prior.

2. Sincerely; actively; diligently; vigorously.

Where his judgment led him to oppose men on a publick account, he would do it vigorously and heartily; yet the opposition ended there. Atterbury.

Vein-healing verven, and head-purging dill,
 Sound favery, and basil hearty-bale. Spenser.

HEAT. n. f. [Heat, per, Saxon; heete, Dan.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object, which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself: and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.

The sword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
 The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
 Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron are a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Moxon.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.

The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age; and many causes are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
 And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines on golden anvils beat,
 Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Tate.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
 But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

9. Pimples in the face; flush.

It has raised animosities in their hearts, and heats in their faces, and broke out in their ribbons. Addison.

10. Agitation of sudden or violent passion; vehemence of action.

They seeing what forces were in the city with them, issued against the tyrant while they were in this heat, before practices might be used to dis-sever them. Sidney.

The friend hath lost his friend;
 And the best quarrels in the heat, are curst

By those that feel their sharpness. Shakespeare.

It might have pleased in the heat and hurry of his rage, but must have displeased in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but in heat of the battle, or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold; but in the heat of play, never observed a sharper, who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most warlike preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.

What can more gratify the Phrygian foe
 Than those distemper'd heats? Dryden.

12. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead

Plead it to her
With all the strength and beat of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Addison's Cato.

Milton.

All yet left of that revolted rout,
Heav'n fall'n, in station stood, or just array,

Sublime with expectation.

Milton.

3. The supreme power; the sovereign of heaven.

Now beav'n help him.

Shakespeare.

The will
And high permission of all-ruling beav'n

Left him at large.

Milton.

The prophets were taught to know the will of God, and thereby instruct the people, and enabled to prophecy, as a testimony of their being sent by beaven.

Temple.

4. The pagan gods; the celestials.

Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show the beavens more just.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which beaven

Will not have earth to know.

Shakespeare, Coriolanus.

Heav'n! what a spring was in his arm, to throw!
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow.

Dryden.

5. Elevation; sublimity.

O, for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest beav'n of invention.

Shakespeare.

6. It is often used in composition.

HEAVEN-BEGOT. Begot by a celestial power.

If I am beav'n-begot, assert your son

Dryden.

HEAVEN-BEGOT.

Vol. I. N^o. 22. 5 L Like

H E D

Like the bedlick in my blood he rages,
And thou must cure me. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

HECTOR. n. f. [from the name of He'ctor, the great Homeris warrior.] A bully; a blustering, turbulent, pervicacious, noisy fellow.

Those usurping hectors, who pretend to honour without religion, think the charge of a lye a blot not to be washed out but by blood. South.

We'll take one cooling cup of nectar,
And drink to this celestial be'ctor. Prior.

To HECTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To threaten; to treat with insolent authoritative terms.

They reckon they must part with honour together with their opinion, if they suffer themselves to be be'ctored out of it. Government of the Tongue.

The weak low spirit Fortune makes her slave;
But she's a drudge, when be'ctor'd by the brave. Dryden.

An honest man, when he came home at night, found another fellow domineering in his family, be'ctoring his servants, and calling for supper. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

To HECTOR. v. n. To play the bully; to bluster.

They have attacked me, some with piteous moans and outcries, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and be'ctoring, others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

One would think the be'ctoring, the storming, the fullen, and all the different species of the angry, should be cured. Spe'ctator.

Don Carlos made her chief director,
That she might o'er the servants be'ctor. Swift.

HEDERA'CEOUS. adj. [hederaceus, Lat.] Producing ivy. Dict.

HEDGE. n. f. [Pegge, Saxon.] A fence made round grounds with prickly bushes, or woven twigs.

It is a good wood for fire, if kept dry; and is very useful for stakes in hedges. Mortimer.

The gardens unfold variety of colours to the eye every morning, and the hedges breath is beyond all perfume. Pope.

Through the verdant maze
Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk. Thomf.

HEDGE, prefixed to any word, notes something mean, vile of the lowest class: perhaps from a hedge, or hedge born man, a man without any known place of birth.

There are five in the first shew: the pedant, the braggart, the hedge-priest, the fool, and the boy. Shakespeare.

The clergy do much better than a little hedge, contemptible, illiterate vicar can be presumed to do. Swift.

A person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge-priest in Little Britain, proceeded gradually to an author. Swift.

To HEDGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To inclose with a hedge, or fence of wood dry or growing.

Hedge thy possession about with thorns. Eccl. xxviii. 24.

Those alleys must be hedged at both ends, to keep out the wind. Bacon.

2. To obstruct.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns. Hof. ii. 6.

3. To incircle for defence.

England, bedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes. Shakespeare's King John.

There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

4. To shut up within an inclosure.

It must not be paid and exported in ready money; so says our law; but that is a law to hedge in the cuckoo, and serves for no purpose: for if we export not goods, for which our merchants have money due to them, how can it be paid by bills of exchange? Locke.

5. To force into a place already full. This seems to be mistaken for edge. To edge in, is to put in by the way that requires least room; but hedge may signify to thrust in with difficulty, as in to a hedge.

You forget yourself

To hedge me in. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

When I was hasty, thou delay'd'st me longer:
I pr'ythee let me hedge one moment more

Into thy promise; for thy life preserv'd. Dryden.

When you are sent on an errand, be sure to hedge in some business of your own.

Swift's Directions to the Footman.

To HEDGE. v. n. To shift; to hide the head.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-BORN. adj. [hedge and born.] Of no known birth; meanly born.

He then, that is not furnish'd in this fort,
Doth but usurp the sacred name of knight,
And should, if I were worthy to be judge,
Be quite degraded, like a hedge-born swain,
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakespeare.

HEDGE-CREEPER. n. f. [hedge and creep.] One that skulks under hedges for bad purposes.

HEDGE-FUMITORY. n. f. A plant; fumaria sepium. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HOG. n. f. [hedge and hog; erinaceus.]

1. An animal set with prickles, like thorns in an hedge.

Like hedge-hogs, which Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their prickles at my foot-fall. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Few have belief to swallow, or hope enough to experience, the collyrium of Albertus; that is to make one fee in the dark: yet thus much, according unto his receipt, will the right eye of an hedge-hog, boiled in oil, and preserved in a brazen vessel, effect. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The hedge-hog hath his backside and flanks thick set with strong and sharp prickles; and besides, by the help of a muscle, can contract himself into a globular figure, and so withdraw his whole under-part, head, belly and legs, within his thicket of prickles. Ray on the Creation.

2. A term of reproach.

Did'st thou not kill this king?
—I grant ye.

—Do'st grant me, hedge-hog? Shakespeare's Richard III.

3. A plant; trefoil; medica ebinata. Ainsworth.

4. The globe-fish; orbis ebinatus. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-HYSSOP. n. f. [hedge and hyssop.] A species of willow-wort; gratiola.

Hedge-hyssop is a purging medicine, and a very rough one: externally it is said to be a vulnerary. Hill's Mat. Medica.

HEDGE-MUSTARD. n. f. A plant.

HEDGE-NETTLE. n. f. A plant; galeopsis. Ainsworth.

HEDGE-NOTE. n. f. [hedge and note.] A word of contempt for low-writing.

When they began to be somewhat better bred, they left these hedge-notes for another sort of poem, which was also full of pleasant raillery. Dryden.

HEDGE-PIG. n. f. [hedge and pig.] A young hedge-hog.

Thrice the brindled cat hath mew'd,
Thrice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

HEDGE-ROW. n. f. [hedge and row.] The series of trees or bushes planted for inclosures.

Sometime walking not unseen
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green, Milton.

The fields in the northern side are divided by hedge-rows of myrtle. Berkley to Pope.

HEDGE-SPARROW. n. f. [hedge and sparrow; curruca.] A sparrow that lives in bushes, distinguished from a sparrow that builds in thatch.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakespeare.

HEDGING-BILL. n. f. [hedge and bill.] A cutting-hook used in making hedges.

Comes master Dametas with a hedging-bill in his hand, chaffing and swearing. Sidney.

HE'DGER. n. f. [from hedge.] One who makes hedges.

H E E

The labour'd ox

In his loose traces from the furrow came,
And the swink'd bedger at his supper sat. Milton.

He would be laughed at, that should go about to make a fine dancer out of a country bedger at past fifty. Locke.

To HEED. v. a. [De'dan, Saxon.] To mind; to regard; to take notice of; to attend.

With pleasure Argus the musician beeds; Dryden.
But wonders much at those new vocal reeds.

He will no more have clear ideas of all the operations of his mind, than he will have all the particular ideas of any landscape or clock, who will not turn his eyes to it, and with attention beed all the parts of it. Locke.

HEED. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; attention.

With wanton beed and giddy cunning,
The melting voice through mazes running. Milton.

Take beed that in their tender years, ideas, that have no natural cohesion, come not to be united in their heads. Locke.

Thou must take beed, my Portius;
The world has all its eyes on Cato's son. Add.

2. Caution; fearful attention; suspicious watch.

Either wise bearing or ignorant carriage is caught as men catch diseases, one of another; therefore, let men take beed of their company. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Take beed; have open eye; for thieves do foot by night:

Take beed ere Summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. Care to avoid.

We should take beed of the neglect or contempt of his worship. Tillotson.

4. Notice; observation.

Speech must come by hearing and learning; and birds give more beed, and mark words more than beasts. Bacon.

5. Seriousness; staidness.

He did unfeal them; and the first he view'd,
He did it with a serious mind; a beed

Was in his countenance. Shakespeare.

6. Regard; respectful notice.

It is a way of calling a man a fool, when no beed is given to what he says. L'Estrange.

HE'DFUL. adj. [from beed.]

1. Watchful; suspicious; vigilant.

Give him beedful note;

For I mine eyes will rivet to his face;
And, after, we will both our judgments join,
In censure of his seeming. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. Attentive; careful; observing; with of.

I am commanded
To tell the passion of my sovereign's heart;
Where fame, late entering at his beedful ears,
Hath plac'd thy beauty's image and thy virtue. Shakespeare.

To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like beedful of the other. Shakespeare.

Thou, beedful of advice, secure proceed;

My praise the precept is, be thine the deed. Pope.

HE'DFULLY. adv. [from beedful.] Attentively; carefully; cautiously.

Let the learner maintain an honourable opinion of his instructor, and beedfully listen to his instructions, as one willing to be led. Watts.

HE'DFULNESS. n. f. [from beedful.] Cautiously; vigilance; attention.

HE'DILY. adv. Cautiously; vigilantly. Dict.

HE'DINESS. n. f. Caution; vigilance. Dict.

HE'DLESS. adj. [from beed.] Negligent; inattentive; careless; thoughtless; regardless; unobserving; with of.

The beedless lover does not know Whose eyes they are that wound him so. Waller.

Headless of verve, and hopeless of the crown,
Scarce half a wit, and more than half a clown. Dryden.

Some ideas, which have more than once offered themselves to the senses, have yet been little taken notice of; the mind being either beedless; as in children, or otherwise employed, as in men.

Locke.

Surprises are often fatal to heedless unguarded innocence.

Sherlock.

HEEDLESSLY, adv. [from heedless.] Carelessly; negligently; inattentively.

Whilst ye discharge the duties of matrimony, ye heedlessly slide into sin.

Abraham and Pope.

HEEDLESSNESS, n. f. [from heedless.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; inattention.

In the like harms they suffer from knocks and falls, they should not be pitied, but bid do so again; which is a better way to cure their heedlessness.

Locke.

HEEL, n. f. [Pele, Saxon.]

1. The part of the foot that protuberates behind.

If the luxated bone be distorted backward, it lieth over the heel bone.

Wifeman's Surgery.

2. The whole foot of animals.

The stag recalls his strength, his speed, His winged heels, and then his armed head; With these t' avoid, with that his fare to meet; But fear prevails, and bids him trust his feet.

Deabam.

Pegasus appeared hanging off the side of a rock, with a fountain running from his heel.

Addison.

3. The feet, as employed in flight.

Nothing is commoner, in times of danger, than for men to leave their masters to bears and tygers, and shew them a fair pair of heels for't.

L'Esrange.

2. To be at the HEELS. To pursue closely; to follow hard.

Sir, when comes your book forth? — Upon the heels of my presentment.

Shakespeare's Timon.

But is there no sequel at the heels of this Mother's admiration?

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

5. To attend closely.

Could we break our way By force, and at our heels all hell should rise With blackest insurrection, to confound Heav'n's purest light.

Milton.

6. To pursue as an enemy.

The Spaniards fled on towards the North to seek their fortunes, being still chased by the English navy at their heels, until they were fain to give them over for want of powder.

Bacon.

Want! hungry want! that hungry meagre fiend,

Is at my heels, and chases me in view.

Orway.

7. To follow close as a dependant.

Through proud London he came fighting on, After th' admired heels of Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare.

8. To lay by the HEELS. To fetter; to shackle; to put in gyves.

If the king blame me for't, I'll lay ye all By th' heels, and suddenly; and on your heads

Shakespeare.

Clap round fines for neglect.

One half of man, his mind, Is, for juris, unconfin'd,

Hudibras.

And cannot be laid by the heels.

I began to smoke that they were a parcel of mummies; and wondered that none of the Mid-west justices took care to lay some of them by the heels.

Addison.

9. Any thing shaped like a heel.

At the other side is a kind of heel or knob, to break clots with.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

Some blamed Mrs. Bull for new heel-pieces her shoes.

Arbutnot.

HEFT, n. f. [from heave.]

1. Heaving; effort.

May be in the oyp

A spider sleep'd, and one may drink; depart, And yet partake no venom; for his knowledge

Is not infected; but if one present Th' abhorrent ingredient to his eye, make known

How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his sides With violent hefts.

Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

2. [For heft.] Handle.

His oily side devours both blade and heft.

Waller.

HE'GIRA, n. f. [Arabick.] A term in chronology, signifying the epocha, or account of time, used by the Arabians and Turks, who begin their computation from the day that Mahomet was forced to make his escape from the city of Mecca, which happened on Friday, July 16, A. D. 622, under the reign of the emperor Heraclius.

Harris.

HE'FER, n. f. [Deafone, Saxon.] A young cow.

Who finds the beifer dead and bleeding fresh, And fees fast by a butcher with an axe,

But will suspect 'twas he that made the slaughter?

Shakespeare.

A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain.

Bacon.

For her the flocks refuse their verdant food, Nor thirty heifers seek the gliding flood.

Pope.

HEIGH HO, interj.

1. An expression of flight languor and uneasiness.

Heigh ho! an't be not four by the day, I'll be hang'd.

Shakespeare.

2. It is used by Dryden, contrarily to custom, as a voice of exultation.

We'll toss off our ale 'till we cannot stand, And heigh-ho for the honour of old England.

Dryden.

HEIGHT, n. f. [from high.]

Addison.

To HEIGHTEN, v. n. [from height.]

1. To raise higher.

2. To improve; to meliorate.

3. To aggravate.

Foreign states used their endeavours to heighten our confusions, and plunge us into all the evils of a civil war.

Addison.

4. To improve by decorations.

As in a room, contrived for state, the height of the roof should bear a proportion to the ara; so in the heightening of poetry, the strength and vehemence of figures should be suited to the occasion.

Dryden.

HEINOUS, adj. [from heinous, French, from haine, hate; or from the Teutonic heon, shame.] Atrocious; wicked in a high degree.

To abrogate or innovate the gospel of Christ, if men or angels should attempt, it were most heinous and accursed sacrilege.

Heber.

This is the man should do the bloody deed: The image of a wicked heinous fault,

Lives in his eye.

Shakespeare.

As it is a most heinous, so it is a most dangerous impiety to despise him that can destroy us.

HEINOUSLY, adv. [from heinous.] Atrociously; wickedly.

HEINOUSNESS, n. f. [from heinous.] Atrociousness; wickedness.

He who can treat offences, provoking God, as jests and trifles, must have little sense of the heinousness of them.

Rogers.

HEIR, n. f. [heire, old Fr. heire, Latin.]

1. One that is inheritor of any thing after the present possessor.

An heir signifies the eldest, who is, by the laws of England, to have all his father's land.

Locke.

What lady is that?

—The heir of Alanfon, Rosalind, her name.

Shakespeare.

That I'll give my voice on Richard's side, To bar my master's heirs in true descent,

God knows, I will not do it.

Shakespeare.

Being heirs together of the grace of life.

1 Peter, iii. 7.

Sunk is the hero, and his glory lost, And I his heir in misery alone.

Pope.

The heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and a tenderness in their constitutions.

Swift.

2. One newly inheriting an estate.

The young extravagant heir had got a new steward, and was resolved to look into his estate.

Swift.

To HEIR, v. a. [from the noun.] To inherit.

His son in blooming youth was snatch'd by fate; Only one daughter heir'd the royal state.

Dryden.

HEIRESS, n. f. [from heir.] An inheritrix; a woman that inherits.

An heiress she, while yet alive; All that was her's to him did give.

Waller.

Æneas, though he married the heiress of the crown, yet claimed no title to it during the life of his father-in-law.

Dryden.

HEIRLESS, adj. [from heir.] Without an heir; wanting one to inherit after him.

I still think of The wrong I did myself; which was so much, That heir's bath made my kingdom.

Shakespeare.

HEIRSHIP, n. f. [from heir.] The state, character, or privileges of an heir.

A layman appoints an heir or an executor in his will, to build an hospital within a year, under pain of being deprived of his heirship.

Ayliffe's Paragon.

HEIR

HEIRLOOM n. f. [heir and geloma, goods, Sax.] Any furniture or moveable decreed to descend by inheritance, and therefore inseparable from the freehold.

Achilles' sceptre was of wood,

Transmitted to the hero's line;

Thence through a long descent of kings

Came an heirloom, as Homer sings.

Swift.

HELD. The preterite and part. pass. of hold.

A rich man beginning to fall, is held up of friends.

Ecclos.

If Minerva had not appeared and held his hand, he had executed his design.

Dryden.

HELVACAL. adj. [belique, French; from hel.] Emerging from the lustre of the sun, or falling into it.

Had they ascribed the heat of the season to this star, they would not have computed from its beliacal ascent.

Brown.

HELIACALLY. adv. [from beliacal.]

From the rising of this star, not cosmically, that is, with the sun, but beliacally, that is, its emergence from the rays of the sun, the ancients computed their canicular days.

Brown.

He is tempestuous in the Summer, when he rises beliacally; and rainy in the Winter, when he rises achronically.

Dryden.

HELICAL. adv. [belice, French; from hel.] Spiral; with many circumvolutions.

The screw is a kind of wedge, multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it.

Wilkins.

HELIOID Parabola, in mathematicks, or the parabolick spiral, is a curve which arises from the supposition of the axis of the common Apollonian parabola's being bent round into the periphery of a circle, and is a line then passing through the extremities of the ordinates, which do now converge towards the centre of the said circle.

Harris.

HELIOCENTRICK. adj. [heliocentrique, French; from hel, and kentron.]

The heliocentrick place of a planet is said to be such as it would appear to us from the sun, if our eye were fixed in its centre.

Harris.

HELIOSCOPE. n. f. [helioscope, French; from hel, and skopein.] A fort of telescope fitted so as to look on the body of the sun, without offence to the eyes.

Harris.

HELIOTROPE. n. f. [heliotrope, and trope; heliotrope, French; heliotropium; Latin.] A plant that turns towards the sun; but more particularly the turn-sol, or sun-flower.

'Tis an observation of flatterers, that they are like the heliotrope; they open only towards the sun, but shut and contract themselves at night, and in cloudy weather.

Government of the Tongue.

HELISPHERICAL. adj. [belix and sphere.]

The heli-spherical line is the rhomb-line in navigation, and is so called because on the globe it winds round the pole spirally, and still comes nearer and nearer to it, but cannot terminate in it.

Harris.

HELIX. n. f. [belic, French; from hel.] Part of a spiral line; a circumvolution.

Find the true inclination of the screw, together with the quantity of water which every belix does contain.

Wilkins.

HELL. n. f. [Pelle, Saxon.]

1. The place of the devil and wicked souls.

For it is a knell

That summons thee to heaven, or to hell. Shakesp.

If a man were a porter of hell gates, he should have old turning the key. Shakespear's Macbeth.

Let none admire

That riches grow in hell; that soil may best

Deserve the precious bane.

Milton.

Hell's black tyrant trembled to behold

The glorious light he forfeited of old. Cowley.

2. The place of separate souls, whether good or bad.

I will go down to my son mourning to hell.

Gen. vi. 35.

He descended into hell.

Apostles Creed.

3. Temporal death.

The pains of hell came about me; the snares of death overtook me. Psalms xviii. 4.

Sidney.

4. The place at a running play to which those who are caught are carried.

Then couples three be straight allotted there;

They of both ends the middle two do fly;

The two that in mid-place, hell called were,

Must strive with waiting foot and watching eye,

To catch of them, and them to hell to bear,

That they, as well as they, hell may supply. Sidney.

5. The place into which the taylor throws his shreds.

This trusty squire, he had as well

As the bold Trojan knight seen hell;

Not with a counterfeit'd pass

Of golden bough, but true gold-lace. Hudibras.

In Covent-garden did a taylor dwell,

Who might deserve a place in his own hell.

King's Cookery.

6. The infernal powers.

Much danger first, much toil did he sustain,

While Saul and hell crost his strong fate in vain. Cow.

7. It is used in composition by the old writers more than by the modern.

HELL-BLACK. adj. Black as hell.

The sea, with such a storm as his bare head

In hell-black night endur'd, would have boil'd up,

And quench'd the stelled fires. Shakesp. King Lear.

HELL-BRED. adj. [hell and bred.] Produced in hell.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,

With foul enfolded smog and flashing fire,

The hell-bred beast threw forth into the skies. Spens.

HELL-BROTH. n. f. [hell and broth.] A composition boiled up for infernal purposes.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;

For a charm of powerful trouble,

Like a hell-broth boil and bubble. Shakesp. Macb.

HELL-DOOMED. adj. [hell and doom.] Consigned to hell.

That I must die here, and live hence by truth? Shakespeare.

All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are infuenced to this action. Shakespeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.

Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants. Arbutnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom. Tillotson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projectile motion the aliment tends to putrefaction; hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

7. From this source; from this original; from this store.

My Flora was my son; for as One sun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrowed hence. Shakespeare.

Their light and grace as stars do thence. Shakespeare.

8. From hence is a vicious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten. Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesy'd from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryden.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.] To send off; to dispatch to a distance. Obsolete.

Go bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belching not to me;
With that his dog he hence'd, his flock he curst. Shakespeare.

HENCEFORTH. adv. [Deononforð, Saxon.]

From this time forward.

Thanes and kinfmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Dryden.

Happier thou may'st be, worthier can't not be;
Taste this, and henceforth be amongst the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton.

I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
'Till day droop. Milton.

If we treat gallant foldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come. Dryden.

HENCEFORWARD. adv. [hence and forward.]

From this time to all futurity.

Henceforward will I bear Upon my target three fair shining suns. Shakespeare.

Pardon, I beseech you;

HER

HER

HEPTACAP'SULAR, adj. [hepta and capsula.] Having seven cavities or cells.

HEPTAGON, n. f. [heptagon, French; ἑπτάγων and γωνία.] A figure with seven sides or angles.

HEPTAGONAL, adj. [from heptagon.] Having seven angles or sides.

HEPTARCHY, n. f. [heptarchie, French; ἑπταρχία and ἀρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans of whom they descended, used shields.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who thar'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps hold Arcite to the temple bent.

HER, pron. [Deja, Dej, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth.

Still new favourites she chose,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the fov'reign pow'r;
Wond'rous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Sufanna took her place.

2. The oblique case of she.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not.

She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem to others so.

The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again.

Should I be left, and thou be left, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me.

HERS, pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, such are her charms, such charms are hers.

This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will fill that thou art mine not hers confests.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours.

HERALD, n. f. [herault, French; herald, German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register enalogies, adjust ensigns armorial, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;

'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet here, no herald am.

When time shall serve let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again.

Embassador of peace, if peace you chuse;
Or herald of a war, if you refuse.

Please thy pride and fearch the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.

2. A precursor, a forerunner; a harbinger.
It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith.

To HERALD, v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as by an herald. A word not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his fight,
Not pay thee.

HERALDRY, n. f. [heraulderie, French; from herald.]
1. The art or office of a herald.
I am writing of heraldry.

Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began.

2. Registry of genealogies.
'Twas no false heraldry when madness drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew.

3. Blazonry.
Metals may blazon common beauties; she Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry.

HERB, n. f. [herbe, French; herba, Latin.]
Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grais and hemlock.

In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Jeson.

With sweet-smelling herbs
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed.

Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury.

If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint.
Herb-eating animals, which don't ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much.

HERB Christopher, or Bane-berries, n. f. A plant.
HERBA'CEOUS, adj. [from herba, Latin.]

1. Belonging to herbs.
Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk; but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce.

2. Feeding on vegetables; perhaps not properly. Their teeth are fitted to their food; the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables.

HERBAGE, n. f. [herbage, French.]
1. Herbs collectively; grais; pasture.
Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals.

2. The tythe and the right of pasture.
HERBAL, n. f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and description of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants.

HERBALIST, n. f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder.

HERBAR, n. f. [A word, I believe, only to be found in Spenser.] Herb; plant.

The roof hereof was arch'd over head,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintily.

HERBARIST, n. f. [herbarius, from herba, Lat.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercised a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination.

He was too much swayed by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colours, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specific difference.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discovered and shewed me first by an ingenious herbarist.

HERBELET, n. f. [Diminutive of herb, or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

Their herbets, which we upon you strow.

HERBESCENT, adj. [herbescens, Latin.] Growing into herbs.

HERBID, adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HERBORIST, n. f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour.

HERBOROUGH, n. f. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written harbour.

The German lord, when he went out of New-gate into the cart, took order to have his arms set up in his last herborough.

HERBOUS, adj. [herbosus, Latin.] Abounding with herbs.

HERBULENT, adj. [from herbula.] Containing herbs.

HERBWOMAN, n. f. [herb and woman.] A woman that sells herbs.

I was like to be pulled to pieces by brewer, butcher, and baker; even my herbwoman dunned me as I went along.

HERBY, adj. [from herb.] Having the nature of herbs.

No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any moss or herby substance.

HERD, n. f. [heord, Saxon.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black cattle. Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds.

There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er
The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.

2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
Count a degenerate herd of Catilines.

I do not remember where ever God delivered his oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd.

3. It antiently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still used. [Pyn's, Saxon.] A senie still retained in composition: as goatberd.

To HERD, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.
Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem
One of the number.

Ran to towns, to herd with knaves and fools,
And undistinguis'd pass among the crowd.

To HERD, v. a. To throw or put into an herd.

However great we are, honest and valiant,
Are herded with the vulgar.

HERDROOM, n. f. [herd and room.] A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?
That shall yonder herdroom, and none other.

HERDMAN, n. f. [herd and man.] One employed in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
In whom no evil did reign, or good appear.

HER

And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
I will devise a cruel death for thee. Sh. Wm. Tal.
Scarce themselves know how to hold
A shephook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs. Milton.
There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
At loop-holes cut through thickest shade.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryd.
The herdsman, round

The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblet's crown'd. Dryd. Virg. Georgicks.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted
by consent. Locke.

HERE. adv. [Dejn, Saxon; bier, Dutch.]

1. In this place.

Before they here approach,
Old Sward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Sh. Macb.

I, upon my frontiers here,

Keep residence. Milton.

Here Nature first begins

Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
While he his second mis'ry suffers here! Cowley.

To-day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.

Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

3. It is used in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:

'Tis finish'd. Dryd. n.

4. In drinking a health.

However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;
To him who was the king, the friend replies.

Prior.

It is often oppos'd to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night mine eyes do itch;

Doth that bode weeping?

'Tis neither here nor there. Shaksp. Othello.

We are come to see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shaksp.peare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave, implore;

Post here for help, seek there their followers. Don.
I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might, perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single pro-felyte. Gov. of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were joined. Spratt's Sermons.

He that rides pest through a country may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savanas in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean
this place.

'Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou lovest here, a better where to find.

Shaksp. King Lear.

HEREABOUTS. adv. [here and about.] About
this place.

I saw hereabouts nothing remarkable, except Au-gustus's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come: in futurity.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing.

Shaksp.peare.

The grand-child, with twelve sons increas'd, departs

HER

From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt.

Milton.

Hereafter he from war shall come,
And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.
You shall be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis Heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

I still shall wait
Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In what estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concern-ment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HEREDITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditary, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's.

Locke.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [hereditum, Latin.] A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditaire, French;
hereditarius, Latin.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom.

Shaksp.peare.

These old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shaksp.

He shall ascend
The throne hereditary, and bound his reign With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heav'ns. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend
Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,
Man looks aloft, and with erected eyes

Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryd. Ovid.

When heroick verse his youth shall raise,
And form it to hereditary praise. Dryd. Virgil.

HEREDITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.] By inheritance.

Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily.

Pope to Swift.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shak.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them,
unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into:
precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant.

Shaksp.peare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

If we should strictly insist hereon, the possibility might fall into question. Brown's Faigair Errours.

HEREOUT. adv. [here and out.]

1. Out of this place.

HER

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spenser.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremical, from eremite, of ignus, a desert; her- mitique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Lat.
dogma.] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholic and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

HERESARCH. n. f. [heresarche, Fr. heresarche.]

A leader in heresy; the head of an herd of he-reticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretic,
but an heresarch. Stillingfleet.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, Fr. heretique.]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholic church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismatick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread

Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Daniel.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick
instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a Papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means Protestants; when a Protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentionously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts's Logic.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold
Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands,
In him that was of late an heretick,
As firm as faith. Shaksp.peare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, her- etical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chiefest place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Decay of Piety.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.] With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.] Formerly; anciently.

I have long desired to know you heretofore, with honouring your virtue, though I love not your person. Shaksp.

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more

Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HERETO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man heretunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose assenteth to the words of

of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are.

Agreeable heros might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this. You, fair sir, be not herewith dismay'd, But constant keep the way in which ye stand.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surpris'd by the Scots.

HERIOT. n. f. [Denezgub, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenfeth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year.

Though thou confume but to renew, Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Latin.] A person that may inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our forefather's heritage divide. He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that carries but a day.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaproditae, Fr. from heros and apros.] An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one right

Canonical hermaproditae. Monstrosity could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaproditae.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaproditae.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaproditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms.

HERMETICAL. adj. [from Hermes, or Mercurius, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass 'till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.] According to the hermetical or chemick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered with fine lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects: no living thing was ever produced there.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, eremiticus.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, five-score winters worn, Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in so eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render.

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot.

2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old, And the late dignities heap'd up to them, We rest your hermit.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high; On top whereof a sacred chapel was, And eke a little hermitage thereby.

To some forlorn and naked hermitage, Remote from all the pleasures of the world.

And may at last my weary age Find out the peaceful hermitage, The hairy gown and mossy cell, Where I may sit and rightly spell

Of every star that heav'n doth thew, And ev'ry herb that sips the dew.

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYLE. n. f. [hermos and dactylus.] Hermodactyle is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length.

This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge: and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used.

HERN. n. f. [Contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree, I ascribe it to you as your second attribute.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to an hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad; And, in one word, heroically mad.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes. Bolingbroke From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree, Being but the fourth of that heroick line.

2. Noble; suitable to an hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name To person or to poem.

Verse makes heroick virtue live, But you can life to verses give.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Methinks heroick poetry, 'till now, Like some fantastick fairy land did show.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and successes of a most just and necessary war.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to an hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd

A life heroick. HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, Fr.] A female hero. Anciently, according to the English analogy, heroess.

But inborn worth, that fortune can controul, New-strung, and stiffer bent her softer soul;

The heroine assum'd the woman's place, Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face.

Then shall the British stage More noble characters expose to view,

And draw her finish'd heroines from you. HEROISM. n. f. [heroisme, Fr.] The qualities or character of an hero.

If the Odyssy be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality.

HERON. n. f. [heron, Fr.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish. So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,

Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern. The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,

Who terror bears upon his soaring wing; Let them on high the frighted hern survey,

And lofty numbers paint their airy fray.

HERONRY. n. f. [from heron, commonly pronounced herony.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large herony above three miles.

HERPES. n. f. [herpes.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds; miliaris, or postularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and exedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes exedens.

HERRING. n. f. [haring, French, Darjung, Sax.] A small sea-fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackerel, and cod.

Buy my herring fresh.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;

If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers; For all the miserable are made hers.

I see her rowling eyes;

And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries; With words not hers, and more than human found,

She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground.

HERSE. n. f. [herse, low Latin; supposed to

Vol. I. No. 22. 5 M come

H E S

come from Pejuan, to praise.] This is likewise written harfe; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.
2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.

When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' harfe,

Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Ref. common.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent harfes shall besiege your gates. Pope.
To HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into an harfe.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would, she were bers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin.

Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.
The Grecians spitefully drew from the darts the corse,
And bers'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.

The house is bers'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Grashaw.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy. Shakespeare.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,

At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryd.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun; as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself. Exodus.

She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELF. adj. [herse and like.] Funeral; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herse-like airs as carols. Bacon.

To HERY. v. a. [Pejuan, Saxon, to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merrymake,
Nor Pan to hery, nor with love to play;

Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or Summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

But were thy years green as now be mine,
Then wouldst thou learn to carol of love,

And hery with hymns thy glass's love. Spenser.

HE'SITANCY. n. f. [from hesitate.] Dubiousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the air, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopped. Boyle.

Some of them reasoned without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to shew that they believed their own reasonings. Atterbury.

To HESITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Grecians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;

Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.

I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person.

Woodward's Natural History.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volubility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [Part, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written bebess.

H E W

Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely best despise. Spenser.

Thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhorr'd commands,

Refusing her grand bests. Shakespeare.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [beteroclit, Fr. beteroclitum, Latin; étric and étric.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The beteroclit nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLYTICAL. adj. [from beteroclit.] Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins beteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown's Vulg. Er.

HETERODOX. adj. [beterodaxe, French; étric and étric.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar, in others to beterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple beterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated unto the loadstone. Brown's Vulg. Er.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [beterogene, French; étric and étric.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not com-material, but merely beterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible, I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, beterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [beterogenité, French, from beterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaicum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequestered into ashes and foot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield far other beterogeneities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [étric and étric.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such beterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mass of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. f. [étric and étric.] Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the Tropick fall at noon always to the North.

To HEW. v. a. part. hewn or beued. [Peapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare.

He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.

He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryd.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell; up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends Upon your favours, fwims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

H E Y

Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night.

Scarce can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandy.

He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of huge bulk. Milton.

We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Isaiah, xxii. 16.

Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rocks. Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came, Dryden's Fables.

The labour of a god.
Next unto bricks are preferr'd the square hewn stone. Motimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, neither polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.

HE'WER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourcore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown.

HE'XAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French; étric and étric.] A figure of six sides or angles: the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown.

Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Roy.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A figure of six angles.

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramhall against Hobbs.

HEXAMETER. n. f. [étric and étric.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroic. Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [étric and angulus, Lat.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or shoots of chrystal. Woodward.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [étric and étric.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come; for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Roy.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [étric and étric.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin bei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyric;

Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HE'YDAY. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolic and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her; hey-day! Hudibras.

HE'YDAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness. At

HID

HID

HIE

At your age,
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare.
HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance.
Obsolete.
But friendly fairies met with many graces;
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenser.
HIA'TION. n. f. [from his, Latin.] The act of gaping.
Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camelion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]
1. An aperture; a gaping breach.
Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyfs below opens into and communicates with it. Woodward.
2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.
The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.
HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Latin.] Belonging to the winter.
This star should rather manifest its warming power in the Winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conversion.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this or here is the learned man.
Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.
An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bridewell dock,
At Westminster and Hicks's hall,
And hiccius doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
H' had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudib.
HICCOUGH. n. f. [bicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.
So by an abbey's skeleton of late
I heard an echo supererogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the biccough o'er and o'er. Cleveland.
Sneezing cureth the biccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
If the stomach be hurt, ingultus or biccough follows. Wifeman's Surgery.
To HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To sob with convulsion of the stomach.
To HICKUP. v. n. [corrupted from biccough.]
To sob with a convulsed stomach.
Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulse to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, to bickup. Hudibras.
HICKWALL. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
HICKWAY. }
HID. } part. pass. of bide.
HIDDEN. }
Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.
Other hidden cause
Left them superior. Milton.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.
To HIDE. v. a. preter. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hidian, Saxon.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.
Avaunt, and quit my sight; let the earth bide thee! Shakespeare.
His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shakespeare's Merchant of Ven.
Nile hears him knocking at his ferefold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.
Thus the fire of gods and men below;
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.
The several parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but exerted that, or this. Dryden.

Then for my corps a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may bide. Dryden.
Seas bid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.
With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection. Addison.
The crafty being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and bides himself under a greater variety of shapes. Addison.
Hell trembles at the fight, and bides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart
Is fill'd with peace. Rowe's Royal Convers.
To HIDE. v. n. To lye hid; to be concealed.
A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Estrange.
Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade;
Bred to disguise, in publick 'tis you bide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,
Weakness or delicacy. Pope.
HIDE AND SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.
The boys and girls would venture to come and play at bide and seek in my hair. Gulliver's Travels.
HIDE. n. f. [Dyde, Saxon; baude, Dutch.]
1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.
The trembling weapon pass
Through nine bull bides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.
Pisistratus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft bides upon the yellow sands. Pope.
2. The human skin: in contempt.
Oh, tyger's heart, wrapt in a woman's bide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shakespeare.
His mantle, now his bide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.
3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; bida, barbarous Latin, as much as one plough can till.] Ainsworth.
One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every bide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watson.
HIDEBOUND. adj. [bide and bound.]
1. A horse is said to be bidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from over-riding, or a surfeit. Farrar's Dictionary.
2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.
A root of a tree may be bidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it.
Bacon's Natural History.
Like stunted bidebound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.
3. Harsh; untractable.
And still the harsher and bidebounder
The damsels prove, become the fonder. Hudibras.
4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ains.
HIDEOUS. adj. [bideux, Fr.]
1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.
If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made bideous. Sidney.
Some monster in thy thoughts,
Too bideous to be shewn. Shakespeare's Othello.
I fled, and cry'd out death!
Hell trembled at the bideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back refounded death. Milton.
His eyes grew stiffen'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her bideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissings fill the place,
And open all the furies of her face. Dryden.
2. It is commonly used of risible objects: the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the hiatus's at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most bideous and amazing noise.
Woodward's Natural History.
3. It is used by Spenser in a sense now retained; detestable.
O bideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.
HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from bideous.] Horribly;
dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.
I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more bideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakespeare.
This, in the present application, is bideously
profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier's Defence.
HIDEOUSNESS. n. f. [from bideous.] Horrible-ness; dreadfulnes; terror.
HIDER. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.
To HIE. v. n. [higan, Saxon.]
1. To hasten; to go in haste.
When they had mark'd the chauged skies,
They wist their hour was spent; then each to rest him bies. Fairy Queen.
My will is even this,
That presently you bis you home to bed. Shakespeare.
Well, I will bis,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakespeare.
Some to the shores do fly,
Some to the woods, or whither fear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction bis. Daniel.
The snake no sooner list,
But virtue heard it, and away she by'd. Crawshaw.
Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a curst hour, he bis. Milton.
Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and bis thee to the sea. Waller.
The youth, returning to his mistress, bis. Dryd.
2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun.
It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.
Auster spy'd him;
Cruel Auster thither by'd him. Crawshaw.
HIERARCH. n. f. [hier, and arch; hierarchie,
French.] The chief of a sacred order.
Angels, by imperial summons call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarchs in orders bright. Milton.
HIERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchieque, French.]
Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.
HIERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French.]
1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.
Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd he from the rest. Fairf.
He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchie. Donne.
Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchie,
The world survey'd. Sandys.
These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r; and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchie, the orders bright. Milton.
The blessedest of mortal wights, now question-less the highest saint in the celestial hierarchie, began to be so importuned, that a great part of the divine liturgy was address'd solely to her. Howel's Vocal Fortif.
2. Ecclesiastical establishment.
The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchie of England. Bacon.
While the old Levitical hierarchie continued, it was part of the ministerial office to flay the sacrifices. South.
Consider what I have written from regard for the church established under the hierarchie of bishops. Swift.
HIEROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyphes, Fr.]
HIEROGLYPHICK. } adj. sacred, and hieroglyphic to carve. }

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd, And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd.

2. The art of writing in picture.

No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. adj. [hieroglyphe, Fr.]

HIEROGLYPHICK. from the noun.

1. Charged with hieroglyphical sculpture.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble.

2. Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

Th' Egyptian serpent figures time,

And, stripp'd, returns into his prime;

If my affection thou would'st win,

First cast thy hieroglyphick skin.

The origin of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [hieroglyphia, Gr.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [hierophantes, Gr.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people.

To HIGGLE. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from biggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain.

In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to biggle and dogde in the amends.

Bafe thou art!

To biggle thus for a few blows,

To gain thy knight an op'lent spouse.

Why all this biggling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull?

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from biggle, which denotes any confused mass, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from biggle.] one who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [Peap, Saxon; hoog, Dutch.]

1. Long upwards; rising above from the surface or from the centre; opposed to deep or long downwards.

Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining, they must of necessity at length come to an equality.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft; opposed to low.

They that stand high have many blasts to shake them,

And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd, That promises a fall, and shakes at ev'ry blast.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabric; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being.

3. Exalted in nature.

The *high*st faculty of the soul.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.

O mortals! blind in fate, who never know

To bear high fortune, or endure the low.

5. Exalted in sentiment.

Solomon liv'd at ease, nor aimed beyond

Higher design than to enjoy his state.

6. Difficult; abstruse.

They meet to hear, and answer such high things.

7. Boastful; ostentatious.

His forces, after all the high discourses, amounted really but to eighteen hundred foot.

8. Arrogant; proud; lofty.

The governor made himself merry with his high and threatening language, and sent him word he would neither give nor receive quarter.

9. Severe; oppressive.

When there appeareth on either side an high hand, violent prosecution, cunning advantages taken, and combination, then is the virtue of a judge seen.

10. Noble; illustrious.

Trust me, I am exceeding weary.

—I had thought, weariness durst not have attacked so high blood.—It doth me, though it dif-colours the complexion of my greatness to acknowledge it.

11. Violent; tempestuous; loud. Applied to the wind.

More ships in calms on a deceitful coast,

Or unseen rocks, than in high storms are lost.

Spiders cannot weave their nets in a high wind.

At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows

high;

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up

In its full fury.

12. Tumultuous; turbulent; ungovernable.

Not only tears

Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds worse within,

Began to rise; high passions, anger,

Mistrust, suspicion, discord, hate, shook fore

Their inward state of mind.

Can heav'nly minds such high resentment show,

Or exercise their spite in human woe?

13. Full; complete: applied to time; now used only in cursory speech.

High time now 'gan it wax for Una fair,

To think of those her captive parents dear.

Sweet warrior, when shall I have peace with you?

High time it is this war now ended were.

It was high time to do so; for it was now certain, that forces were already upon their march towards the West.

It was high time for the lords to look about them.

14. Rais'd to any great degree; as, high pleasure; high luxury; a high performance; a high colour.

Solomon liv'd at ease, and full

Of honour, wealth, high fare.

High sauces and spices are fetch'd from the Indies.

15. Advancing in latitude from the line.

They are forced to take their course either high

to the North, or low to the South.

16. At the most perfect state; in the meridian: as, by the sun it is high noon: whence probably the foregoing expression, high time.

It is yet high day, neither is it time that the cattle should be gathered.

17. Far advanced in antiquity.

The nominal observation of the several days of the week is very high, and as old as the ancient Egyptians, who named the same according to the seven planets.

18. Dear; exorbitant in price.

If they must be good at so high a rate, they know they may be safe at a cheaper.

19. Capital; great; opposed to little: as, high treason, in opposition to petty.

HIGH. n. f. High place; elevation; superior region; only used with from and on.

Which when the king of gods beheld from high, He sigh'd.

On HIGH. Aloft; above; into superior regions.

Wide is the fronting gate, and rais'd on high,

With adamantine columns threatens the sky.

HIGH is much used in composition with variety of meaning.

HIGH-BLE'ST. adj. Supremely happy.

The good which we enjoy from heav'n descends;

But that from us ought should ascend to heav'n

So prevalent, as to concern the mind

Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,

Hard to belief may seem.

HIGH-BLOWN. Swelled much with wind; much inflated.

I have ventur'd,

Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,

These many Summers on a sea of glory;

But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride

At length broke under me, and now has left me

Weary, and old with service, to the mercy

Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

HIVE.

HIVE, n. f. [pyre, Saxon.]

1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.
So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away.

Shakespeare.

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a sound, proportion'd to their ear,
Appease their rage, invite them to the bive. Waller.
Bees have each of them a hole in their hives:
their honey is their own, and every bee minds her own concerns. Addison.

2. The bees inhabiting a hive.
The commons, like an angry bive of bees
That want their leader, scatter up and down.

Shakespeare.

3. A company being together.
What modern mafons call a lodge, was by antiquity called a bive of free mafons; and therefore, when a diffention happens, the going off is to this day called swarming. Swift.

To HIVE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into hives; to harbour.
Mr. Addison of Oxford has been troublesome to Whose father for his hoarding went to hell? Shak.

To HOARD, v. a.

1. To lay in hoards; to husband privily; to store secretly.

The hoarded plague of the gods requite your love? Shakespeare.

You hoard not wealth for your own private use,
But on the publick spend the rich produce. Dryden.

You will be unsuccessful, if you give out of a great man, who is remarkable for his frugality for the publick, that he squanders away the nation's money; but you may safely relate that he hoards it.
Arbutnot's Art of Political Lying.

A superfluous abundance tempts us to forget God, when it is hoarded in our treasures, or considered as a safe, independent provision laid up for many years. Rogers.

2. It is sometimes enforced by the participle up.
I have just occasion to complain of them, who,
because they understand Chaucer, would hoard him up as misers do their grandam gold, only to look on it themselves, and hinder others from making use of it. Dryden.

The base wretch who hoards up all he can,
Is prais'd, and call'd a careful thrifty man. Dryden.
HOARDER, n. f. [from hoard.] One that stores up in secret.

look like aged Socrates upon his boy's hobby horse.

Glover.

As young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer;
But leap pro libitu, and scout
On horse call'd hobby, or without. Prior.

No hobby horse, with gorgeous top,
Could with this Rod of Sid compare. Swift.

4. A stupid fellow.
I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby horses must not hear.

Shakespeare.

HOBGOBLIN, n. f. [according to Skinner, for robgeblins, from Robin Goodfellow, Hob being the nickname of Robin: but more probably, according to Wallis and Junius, hobgoblins empyae, because they do not move their feet: whence, says Wallis, came the boys play of fox in the hole, the fox always hopping on one leg.] A frightful fairy.

Fairies, black, grey, green, and white,
Attend your office and your quality:
Crier hobgoblin, make the fairy o-yes. Shakespeare.

trary.
Bacon.
When the religion formerly received is rent by discords, and when the holiness of the professors of religion is decayed, and full of scandal, and withal the times be stupid, ignorant, and barbarous, you may doubt the springing up of a new sect; if then also there should arise any extravagant and strange spirit, to make himself author thereof; all which points held when Mahomet published his law.
Bacon.
Nothing can be of greater use and defence to the mind than the discovering of the colours of good and evil, shewing in what cases they hold, and in

7. Power; influence operating on the mind.
Rural recreations abroad, and books at home, are the innocent pleasures of a man who is early wife; and gives fortune no more hold of him than of necessity he must.

Dryden.

Fear is that passion which hath the greatest power over us, and by which God and his laws take the surest hold of us.

Tillotson.

Let it consist with an unbeliever's interest and safety to wrong you, and then it will be impossible you can have any hold upon him, because there is nothing left to give him a check, or to put in the balance against his profit.

Swift.

8. Hold of a Ship. All that part which lies between the keelson and the lower deck.

Harri.

Now a sea into the hold was got,

Reverbs no hollowness. Shaksp. King Lear.

HOL

People, young and raw, and soft natured, think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of any man's: but when experience shall have shewn them the hardness of most hearts, the hollowness of others, and the base-ness and ingratitude of almost all, they will then find that a friend is the gift of God, and that he only who made hearts can unite them. South.

1. Murder; mankilling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood:

construe this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden; but construe it in reference to the law of the Jews,

about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clean other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood. Hooker.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives!

The homicide of names is less than lives. Dryden.

3. [Homicide, Fr. bomicida, Latin.] A murderer;

a manslaughter.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,

So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.

—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks. Shakespeare.

Hector comes, the homicide to wield,

His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strow the field. Dryden.

HOMICIDAL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous;

bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,

With homicidal rage, the king oppresses. Pope.

HOMILETICAL. adj. [homiletikos.] Social; conversible.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for recrements, severe, his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy, fullen ones of the cloy-

ter. Atterbury.

HOMILY. n. f. [homilie, French; homilia] A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons. Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people! Shakespeare. As You Like It.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church

we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day. Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGENEAL. } adj. [homogene, French,

HOMOGENEOUS. } [homogenos.] Having the same nature or principles; suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts. Bacon.

HON

Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous concretion, whose material is properly water.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from alum, and so of the rest. Woodw. Nat. Hist.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,

I call simple, homogeneous, and similar; and that,

whose rays are some more refrangible than others

I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.

Newton.

HOMOGENEALNESS. n. f. [from homogeneous,

HOMOGENEITY. } or homogeneous.] Parti-

HOMOGENEOUSNESS. } cipation of the same principles or nature; similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbut. on Al.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters,

it is impossible to account for the homogeneity

or similitude of the fermented liquors. Ch. ync.

HOMOGENY. n. f. [homogenia.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth

to his nature or homogeny. Bacon

HOMOLOGOUS. adj. [homologos, Fr. homologue.]

Having the same manner or proportions.

HOMONYMOUS. adj. [homonymos, Fr. homonyme.]

Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous;

and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation.

Watts's Logic.

HOMONYMY. n. f. [homonymie, Fr. homonymie.]

Equivocation; ambiguity.

HOMOTENOUS. adj. [homotenus.] Equable: said of such distempers as keep a constant tenour of rife, state, and decension. Quincy.

HONE. n. f. [This word M. Gaspar derives from axon; Junius from hoglan, Welch; Skinner, who is always rational, from pæn, Saxon, a stone;

pænan, to stone.] A whetstone for a razor.

A hone and a parer, to pare away griefs. Tusser.

To HONE. v. n. [pongan, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

HONEST. adj. [boneste, Fr. boneste, Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as the king. Shakespeare.

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no farther to his health. Temple.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts's Logic.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry, and yet honest too. Shakespeare.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day,

He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay. Tate.

HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot

Live honestly, would rather perish safely. Ben Jonson.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HONESTY. n. f. [bonesté, Fr. bonesté, Latin.]

Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why then, mine honesty shall be my dowry.

Shakespeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,

That at her flow'ry work doth sing, Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;

And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,

To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakespeare.

Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear

The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue

Draws hitherward. Milton.

HONEY. n. f. [Punig, Saxon; bonig, Dutch;

bonce, honig, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm,

obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee,

by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring;

but in hard seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves.

Hill's Mat. Med.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

The art of order to a peopled kingdom.

Shakespeare's Henry V.

Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm that he was fed by honey bees. Raleigh's Hist.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which either of its own nature, or by art, would grow

as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours.

Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey pot.

L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sap, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral:

honey contains no inflammable spirit, before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation

it affords nothing that will burn in the fire.

Arbutus.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;

Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Matter against him, that for ever mars

The honey of his language. Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,

Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness: a name of tenderness.

[Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well desir'd in Cyprus;

I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakespeare. Ortel.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk fondly.

Nay, but to live—

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,

Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love

HON

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [boney and comb.] The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.
All these a milk-white boney-comb furround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd.
Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [boney and comb.] Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun, which was boney-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [boney and dew.] Sweet dew. There is a boney-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects.

How boney-dews enbalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn.
Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.] A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name.

HONEY-CRAT. n. f. [mellio, Latin; boney and crat.] An insect.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [boney and moon.] The first month after marriage, when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his fiery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the boney-moon is over.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Lat.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is, cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet.

Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where boney-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the fun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against the power that bred it.

Watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting boney-suckle.
Then melfoil beat, and boney-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from boney.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bees,
And leave them boneyless.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Latin.] A plant.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.
There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory which are properly triumphal arches.

This monument is only honorary; for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere.

2. Conferring honour without gain.
The Romans abounded with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them.

HONOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Lat.]

1. Dignity; high rank.
2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying it through can honour him.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not now used.
Return unto thy lord,
Bid him not fear the separated councils:

HON

His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Catesby.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,
Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours
Of man's impossibilities, have preserved thee.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, thine honour, Lewis; thine honour.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from conscience, 'tis no more than a regard to the censure and esteem of the world.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave.

His Grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst purfuivants.

—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!
Is this the honour they do one another?

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it, implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power.

7. Chastity.
Be the honour flaw'd,

I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't.

She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,

In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their fun'ral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an inconsiderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henry the seventh, truly pitying
My father's lots, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble.

Honours were conferred upon Antonine by Hadrian in his infancy.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise.

To HONOUR. v. a. [honover, French; honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches.

HON

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches?

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition,
Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd and scatter'd,

By mingling them with us, the honour'd number.

3. To glorify.

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptians may know that I am the Lord.

HONOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel againk Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs?

Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable task on me, were more able to perform it themselves.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow.

8. Equitable.

HONOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.]

Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

HONOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

1. With tokens of honour.

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did honourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason, and condemned.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve!

HONOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer.

HONOR, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heis, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood; fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhood. Sometimes it is taken taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; fisherhood, a company of fishers.

HOOD. n. f. [Dor, Saxon, probably from he-pod, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head. In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd: Their hoods and sleeves the same. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbutn. on Coins.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd, The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say, Amen. Shakespeare.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes, In firmamental waters dipp'd above; Of it a broad extinguisher he makes, And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove. Dryden.

HOODMAN Blind. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil wast, That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind? Shak.

To HOOD-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice. Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries. Shakespeare.

Then she who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,

Doth first herself within death's mirror see. Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one loof, And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a poof. Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that start. Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?

Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Roué.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,

The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court. Garib.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to, Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakespeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hood-wink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [Dor, Saxon; boef, Dutch.] The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets. Ezek. xxvi. 11.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns as well as the horse of his hoofs. Mora.

HOOFED. adj. [from boef.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Grew.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore-feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOK. n. f. [hoce, Saxon; boeck, Dutch.]

1. Any thing bent so as to catch hold: as, a shepherd's hook and pot hook.

This falling not, for that they had not far enough undermined it, they assayed with great books and strong ropes to have pulled it down. Kneller.

2. The curved wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks, That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought, They us with books and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man Loves woman for, besides that book of wiving, Fairness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd, With books and ladders, as need did require; The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. Fairy Queen.

5. A fickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a book at the end of a long stick. Mortimer.

6. Any instrument to cut or lop with.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book, Like flashing Bentley with his desperate book. Pope.

7. The part of the hinge fixed to the post: whence the proverb, off the books, for in disorder.

My doublet books, Like him that wears it, quite off o' the books. Cleaveland.

She was horribly bold, meddling, and expensive, easily put off the books, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

While Sheridan is off the books, And friend Delany at his books. Swift.

8. HOOK. [In husbandry.] A field sown two years running.

9. HOOK or CROOK. One way or other; by any expedient; by any means direct or oblique. Ludicrous.

Which he by book or crook had gather'd, And for his own inventions father'd. Hudibras.

He would bring him by book or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

To HOOK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish: upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To intrap; to insnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

But she I can hook to me. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with an hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HOOKED. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curved.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gryps, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'st, with unjust decree, To seize the prize which I so dearly bought: Mean match to thine; for still above the rest, Thy book'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryden.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the backades of leaves. Grew.

HOOKEDNESS. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

I may justly say with the book-nosed fellow of Rome there, Caesar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

HOOP. n. f. [boep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly calks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends, A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in, That the united vessel of their blood Shall never leak. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

If I knew

What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shak. Ant. and Cle.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter? — About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shakespeare.

To view so lewd a town, and to refrain, What hoops of iron could my spleen contain! Dryden.

And learned Athens to our art must stoop, Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope.

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop: The entry bruish'd against her hoop. Swift.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addison on Italy.

To HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind or enclose with hoops.

The three hoop'd pot shall have ten hoops, and I will make it felony to drink small beer. Shakespeare.

The calks for his Majesty's shipping were hoop'd as a wine cask, or hoop'd with iron. Raleigh.

2. To encircle; to clasp; to surround.

If ever henceforth thou Shalt hoop his body more with thy embraces, I will devise a death. Shakespeare. Winter's Tale.

I hoop the firmament, and make This my embrace the zodiack. Cleaveland.

That shelly guard, which hoops in the eye, and hides the greater part of it, might occasion his mistake. Grew.

To HOOP. v. n. [from wopgan, or wopyan, Gothic; or houper, French, derived from the Gothic. This word is generally written wopop, which is more proper if we deduce it from the Gothic; and hoop if we deduce it from the French.]

To shout; to make an outcry by way of call or pursuit.

To HOOP. v. a.

1. To drive with a shout.

Dastard nobles Suffer'd me, by the voice of slaves, to be Hoop'd out of Rome. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

2. To call by a shout.

To HOP. v. n. [Poppan, Saxon; heppen, Dut.]

1. To jump; to skip lightly.

I would have thee gone,
And yet no further than a wanton's bird,
That lets it hop a little from her hand,
And with a silk thread plucks it back again. Shak.

Go, hop me over every kennel home;
For you shall hop without my custom, sir. Shaksp.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman,
Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes. Shaksp.

The painted birds, companions of the Spring,
Hopping from spray to spray were heard. Dryden.

Your Ben and Fletcher, in their first young flight,

Do no Volpone, nor no Arbaces write;
But hopp'd about, and short excursions made

From bough to bough, as if they were afraid. Dryd.

Why don't we vindicate ourselves by trial or deal, and hop over heated ploughshares blindfold?

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thuih hopping about my walks. Speetator.

2. To leap on one leg.

Men with heads like dogs, and others with one huge foot alone, whereupon they did hop from place to place. Abbot.

3. To walk lamely, or with one leg less nimble or strong than the other; to limp; to halt.

The limping smith observ'd the fadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there, himself a jest,

Put in his word. Dryden's Homer.

4. To move; to play.

Her feeble pulse, to prove if any drop
Of living blood yet in her veins did hop. Fairy Qu.

HOP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A jump; a light leap.

2. A jump on one leg.

When my wings are on, I can go above a hundred yards at a hop, step, and jump. Addison.

3. A place where meaner people dance.

HOP. n. f. [hop, Dut. lupulus, Lat.] A plant.

It has a creeping root: the leaves are rough, angular, and conjugated; the stalks climb and twist about whatever is near them; the flowers are male and female on different plants: the male flower consists of a calyx divided into five parts, which surround the stamina, but has no petals to the flower: the female plants have their flowers collected into squamose heads, which grow in bunches: from each leafy scale is produced an horned ovary, which becomes a single roundish feed. Miller.

If hop yard or orchard ye mind for to have,
For hop poles and crotches in lopping to save. Tuff.

The planting of hop yards is profitable for the planters, and consequently for the kingdom. Bacon.

Beer hath malt first infused in the liquor, and is afterwards boiled with the hop. Bacon.

Next to thistles are hop strings, cut after the flowers are gathered. Derham.

Have the poles without forks, otherwise it will be troublesome to part the hop vines and the poles. Mortimer.

HOPE. n. f. [Dopa, Saxon; hope, Dutch.]

1. Expectation of some good; an expectation indulged with pleasure.

Hope is that pleasure in the mind which every one finds in himself, upon the thought of a profitable future enjoyment of a thing, which is apt to delight him. Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again. Job, xiv. 7.

When in heaven she shall his essence see,
This is her sov'reign good, and perfect bliss;

Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this. Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;

But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now. Crashaw.

Faith is opposed to infidelity, and hope to despair. Taylor.

He fought them both, but wish'd his hap might find

Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope
Of what so seldom chanc'd: when to his wish,

Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fane in long procession go,

In hopes to reconcile their heav'nly foe. Dryd. Vir.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be, as torment myself with the fear on't.

To encourage our hopes, it gives us the highest assurance of most lasting happiness, in case of obedience. Tillotson.

The deceased really lived like one that had his hope in another life; a life which he hath now entered upon, having exchanged hope for sight, desire for enjoyment. Atterbury.

Young men look rather to the past age than the present, and therefore the future may have some hopes of them. Swift.

2. Confidence in a future event, or in the future conduct of any person.

It is good, being put to death by men, to look for hope from God, to be raised up again by him. Mac. vii. 14.

Blessed is he who is not fallen from his hope in the Lord. Eccles. xiv. 2.

3. That which gives hope; that on which the hopes are fixed, as an agent by which something desired may be effected.

I might see from far some forty truncheoneers draw to her succour, which where the hope of the Strand, where the was quarter'd. Shaksp. H. VIII.

4. The object of hope.

Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's hope;

To wit, an indigested deform'd lump. Shaksp. Lear.

She was his care, his hope, and his delight,
Most in his thought, and ever in his sight. Dryden.

HOPE. n. f. Any sloping plain between the ridges of mountains. Ansforth.

To HOPE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in expectation of some good.

Hope for good success, according to the efficacy of the causes and the instrument; and let the husbandman hope for a good harvest. Tayl. R. of liv. bo.

My muse, by storms long tost,
Is thrown upon your hospitable coast;

And finds more favour by her ill success,
Than she could hope for by her happiness. Dryden.

Who knows what adverse fortune my befall!
Arm well your mind, hope little, and fear all. Dryd.

2. To place confidence in another.

He shall strengthen your heart, all ye that hope in the Lord. Psaln xxxi. 24.

To HOPE. v. a. To expect with desire.

The sun shines hot; and if we use delay,
Cold-biting Winter mars our hop'd for hay. Shaksp. Lear.

So stands the Thracian herdsmen with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear. Dryden.

HOPEFUL. adj. [hope and full.]

1. Full of qualities which produce hope; promising; likely to obtain success; likely to come to maturity; likely to gratify desire, or answer expectation.

HOP

He will advance thee:

I know his noble nature, not to let Thy hopeful service perish. Shaksp. Lear.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince whom you must not desert. Bacon.

What to the old can greater pleasure be,
Than hopeful and ingenious youth to see? Decker.

They take up a book in their declining years, and grow very hopeful scholars by that time they are threescore. Addison.

2. Full of hope; full of expectation of success. This sense is now almost confined to Scotland, though it is analogical, and found in good writers.

Men of their own natural inclination hopeful and strongly conceited, whatsoever they took in hand. Hobbes.

I was hopeful the success of your first attempts would encourage you to make trial also of more nice and difficult experiments. Boyle.

Whatever ills the friendless orphan bears,
Bereav'd of parents in his infant years,

Still must the wrong'd Telemachus sustain,
If hopeful of your aid, he hopes in vain. Pope.

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hopeful.]

1. In such manner as to raise hope; in a promising way.

He left all his female kindred either matched with peers of the realm actually, or hopefully with earls' sons and heirs. Watson.

They were ready to renew the war, and to prosecute it hopefully, to the reduction or suppression of the Irish. Clarendon.

2. With hope; without despair. This sense is rare.

From your promising and generous endeavours we may hopefully expect a considerable enlargement of the history of nature. Gravelin.

HOPEFULNESS. n. f. [from hopeful.] Promise of good; likelihood to succeed.

Set down beforehand certain signatures of hopefulness, or characters, whereby may be timely described what the child will prove in probability. Watson.

HOPELESS. adj. [from hope.]

1. Without hope; without pleasing expectation; despairing.

Are they indifferent, being used as signs of immoderate and hopeless lamentation for the dead? Hobbes.

Alas! I am a woman, friendless, hopeless! Shaksp. Lear.

He watches with greedy hope to find
His wish, and best advantage, us afunder;

Hopeless to circumvent us join'd, were each
To other speedy aid might lend at need. Milton.

The fall'n archangel, envious of our state,
And hopeless to prevail by open force,

Seeks hid advantage. Dryden's State of Innocence.

HOPELESS of ransom, and condemn'd to lie
In durance, doom'd a ling'ring death to die. Dryd.

2. Giving no hope; promising nothing pleasing. The hopeless word of never to return, Breathe I against thee upon pain of life. Shaksp. Lear.

HOPELESS. n. f. [from hope.] One that has pleasing expectations.

I except all hoppers, who turn the scale, because the strong expectation of a good certain salary will outweigh the loss by bad rents. Swift.

HOPEFULLY. adv. [from hoping.] With hope; with expectation of good.

One sign of despair is the peremptory contempt of the condition which is the ground of hope; the going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopingly, and confidently in wilful habits of sin. Hammond.

HOOPER. n. f. [from hop.] He who hops or jumps on one leg. Ansforth.

HOOPERS. n. f. [commonly called Scotch hoppers.] A kind of play in which the actor hops on one leg.

HOOPER. n. f. [so called because it is always hopping, or in agitation. It is called in French, le

the same reason, tremie or tremus.]

1. The box or open frame of wood into which the corn is put to be ground.

The salt of the lake Asphaltites shooteth into perfect cubes. Sometimes they are pyramidal and plain, like the hopper of a mill. Grew.

Granivorous birds have the mechanism of a mill: their maw is the hopper which holds and softens the grain, letting it drop by degrees into the stomach. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Just at the hopper will I stand,
In my whole life I never saw grist ground,
And mark the clack how justly it will found. Betterton.

2. A basket for carrying feed.

Ho'RAL. adj. [from hora, Latin.] Relating to the hour. Ainsworth.

Howe'er reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.

Ho'RARY. adj. [horaire, Fr. horarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to an hour.

I'll draw a figure that shall tell you,

What you perhaps forgot befell you,

By way of horary inspection,

Which some account our worst erection. Hudibras.

In his answer to an horary question, as what hour of the night to set a fox-trap, he has discussed, under the character of Reynard, the manner of surprising all sharpers. Tatler.

2. Continuing for an hour.

When, from a basket of Summer-fruit, God by Amos foretold the destruction of his people, thereby was declared the propinquity of their desolation, and that their tranquillity was of no longer duration than those horary or soon decaying fruits of Summer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Horde. n. f. A clan; a migratory crew of people. It is applied only to the Tartars.

Of lost mankind, in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde with dreadful sweep,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form. Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakespeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his car]

Above the border of this horizon,

We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates. Shakespeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast

this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland. Bacon.

In his East the glorious lamp was seen,

Regent of day; and all th' horizon round

Invested with bright rays. Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,

Saluted in her song the morning gray;

And soon the sun arose with beams so bright,

That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous fight. Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horror that rises from such a prospect. Addison.

HORIZONTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

1. Near the horizon.

As when the sun, new risen,

Looks through the horizontal misty air,

Shorn of his beams; or from behind the moon,

In dim eclipse, disastrous twilight sheds

On half the nations. Milton.

2. Parallel to the horizon; on a level.

An obelisk erected, and golden figures placed horizontal about it, was brought out of Egypt by Augustus. Brown.

The problem is reduced to this; what perpendicular height is necessary to place several ranks of rowers in a plane inclined to a horizontal line in a given angle? Arbutnot on Coins.

HORIZONTALLY. adv. [from horizontal.] In a direction parallel to the horizon.

As it will not sink into the bottom, so will it neither float above, like lighter bodies; but, being near in weight, lie superficially, or almost horizontally unto it. Brown.

The ambient ether is too liquid and empty to impel them horizontally with celerity. Bentley.

HORN. n. f. [hörn, Gothick; Popin, Saxon; horn, Dutch.]

1. The hard bodies which grow on the heads of some graminivorous quadrupeds, and serve them for weapons.

No beast that hath horns hath upper teeth. Bacon.

Zelus rises through the ground,

Bending the bull's tough neck with pain,

That toffes back his horns in vain. Addison.

All that process is no more surprising than the eruption of horns in some brutes, or of teeth and beard in men at certain periods of age. Bentley.

2. An instrument of wind-musick made of horn.

The fquire 'gan nigher to approach,

And wind his horn under the cattle-wall,

That with the noise it shook as it would fall. Fairy Queen.

There's a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news. Shakespeare.

The goddess to her crooked horn

Adds all her breath: the rocks and woods around,

And mountains, tremble at th' infernal sound. Dryden.

Fair Ascanius, and his youthful train,

With horns and hounds a hunting match ordain. Dryden.

3. The extremity of the waxing or waning moon, as mentioned by poets.

She blest'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,

That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,

To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born. Dry.

The moon

Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns. Thomson.

4. The feelers of a snail. Whence the proverb,

To pull in the horns, to repress one's ardour.

Love's feeling is more soft and sensible,

Than are the tender horns of cockled snails. Shakef.

Aufidius,

Hearing of our Marcius's banishment,

Thrust forth his horns again into the world,

Which were inshell'd when Marcius stood for Rome, Shakespeare.

And durst not once peep out.

5. A drinking cup made of horn.

6. Antler of a cuckold.

If I have horns to make one mad,

Let the proverb go with me, I'll be horn mad. Shakespeare.

Merchants, vent'ring through the main,

Slight pyrates, rocks, and horns for gain. Hudibras.

7. HORN mad. Perhaps mad as a cuckold.

I am glad he went not in himself: if he had, he would have been horn mad. Shakef. Mer. W. of W.

HORNB'AK. } n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNF'SH. } n. f. A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HORNB'AM. n. f. [horn and beam, Dutch, for tree, from the hardness of the timber.]

It hath leaves like the elm or beech-tree. The timber is very tough and inflexible, and of excellent use. Miller.

Ho'RNBOOK. n. f. [horn and book.] The first book of children, covered with horn to keep it unfaded.

He teaches boys the *horn*book. Shakespeare.

Nothing has been considered of this kind out of the ordinary road of the *horn*book and primer. Locke.

To master John the English maid

A *horn*book gives of ginger-bread;

And that the child may learn the better,

As he can name, he eats the letter. Prior.

Ho'RNED. adj. [from horn.] Furnished with horns.

As when two rams, stirr'd with ambitious pride,

Fight for the rule of the rich fleeced flock,

Their horned fronts so fierce on either side

Do meet, that, with the terror of the shock,

Astonish'd both stand senseless as a block. Fai. 2.

Thither all the horned host resorts,
To graze the ranker mead. Denham.

Thou king of horned floods, whose plenteous urn
Suffices fatness to the fruitful corn. Dryden.

Ho'RN'ER. n. f. [from horn.] One that works in horn, and sells horns.

The skin of a bull's forehead is the part of the hide made use of by horners, whereupon they shave their horns. Grew.

Ho'RN'ET. n. f. [Pynette, Saxon, from its horns.] A very large strong stinging fly, which makes its nest in hollow trees.

Silence, in times of suffring, is the best;

'Tis dangerous to disturb a hornet's nest. Dryden.

Hornets do mischief to trees by breeding in them. Mortimer.

I have often admired how hornets, that gather dry materials for building their nests, have found a proper matter to glue their combs. Derham's Physico-Theology.

Ho'RNFOOT. n. f. [horn and foot.] Hoofed.

Mad frantick men, that did not only quake!

With hornfoot horses, and brags wheels, Jove's storms to emulate. Hakewill on Providence.

Ho'RNOWL. n. f. A kind of horned owl. Ains.

Ho'RNPIPE. n. f. [horn and pipe.] A country dance, danced commonly to a horn.

A lusty tablere,

That to thee many a hornpipe play'd,

Whereto they dauncen each one with his maid. Spenser.

There many a hornpipe he tun'd to his Phyllis. Raleigh.

Let all the quicksilver i' the mine

Run to the feet veins; and refine

Your firkhum jerkhum to a dance

Shall fetch the fiddlers out of France,

To wonder at the hornpipes here

Of Nottingham and Derbyshire. Ben Jonson.

Florinda danced the Derbyshire hornpipe in the presence of several friends. Tatler.

Ho'RNSTONE. n. f. A kind of blue stone. Ainsworth.

Ho'RNWORK. n. f. A kind of angular fortification.

Ho'RN'Y. adj. [from horn.]

1. Made of horn.

2. Resembling horn.

He thought he by the brook of Cherith stood,

And saw the ravens with their horny beaks

Food to Elijah bringing even and morn. Milton.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up above its convexity, and is of an hyper-bolical figure. Ray.

Rough are her ears, and broad her horny feet. Dryden.

The pineal gland was encompassed with a kind of horny substance. Addison.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates it so as to turn it horny, like parchment; but when it is thoroughly putrified, it will no longer concrete. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Hard as horn; callous.

Tyrreus, the foster-father of the beast,

Then clench'd a hatchet in his horny fist. Dryden.

HORO'GRAPHY. n. f. [horographie, Fr. uza and γράφω.] An account of the hours.

Ho'ROLOGE. } n. f. [horologium, Latin.] Any

Ho'ROLOGY. } instrument that tells the hour:

as a clock; a watch; an hourglass.

He'll watch the horologe a double set,

If drink rock not his cradle. Shakespeare.

Before the days of Jerome there were horologies, that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HORO'METRY. n. f. [horometrie, French; uza

and μέτρον.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown's Vulg. Er.

Ho'ROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; uza and σκοπεῖν.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless

berless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is found at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, oppresseth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
His fire, the bleak-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
From Mars his forge sent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope;
This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Greec.

They understood the planets and the zodiac by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust they sprung out of. B. m. y.

HORRENT. adj. [horrens, Latin. Horrentis pilis agmina.] Pointed outwards; bristled with points: a word perhaps introduced by Milton.
Him a globe

Of fiery seraphim incircled round
With bright imblazonry and horrent arms. Milton.

HORRIBLE. adj. [horribile, Fr. horribilis, Lat.] Dreadful; terrible; shocking: hideous: enormous. No colour affecteth the eye much with displeasure: there be fights that are horrible, because they excite the memory of things that are odious or fearful. Bacon.

A dungeon horrible on all sides round,
As one great furnace flamed. Milton.

O fight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel! Milton.
Eternal happiness and eternal misery, meeting with a persuasion that the soul is immortal, are, of all others, the first the most desirable, and the latter the most horrible to human apprehension. South.

HORRIBLENESS. n. f. [from horrible.] Dreadfulness; hideousness; terribleness; fearfulness.

HORRIBLY. adv. [from horrible.]
1. Dreadfully; hideously.
What hideous noise was that?

Horribly loud. Milton.
2. To a dreadful degree.

The contagion of these ill precedents, both in civility and virtue, horribly infects children. Locke.

HORRID. adj. [horridus, Latin.]
1. Hideous; dreadful; shocking.

Give colour to my pale cheek with thy blood,
That we the horrid may seem to those Which chance to find us. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell can come a devil more damn'd,
In evils to top Macbeth. Shakespeare.

Horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

2. Shocking; offensive: unpleasing: in women's cant.

Already I your tears survey,
Already hear the horrid things they say. Pope.

3. Rough; rugged.
Horrid with fern, and intricate with thorn,
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn. Dryden.

HORRIDNESS. n. f. [from horrid.] Hideousness; enormity.

A bloody designer suborns his instrument to take away such a man's life, and the confessor represents the horridness of the fact, and brings him to repentance. Hammond.

HORRIFICK. adj. [horrificus, Lat.] Causing horror.

His jaws horrifick, arm'd with three-fold fate,
Here dwells the direful shark. Thomson.

HORRISONOUS. adj. [horrisonus, Lat.] Sounding dreadfully.

HORROR. n. f. [horror, Lat. horror, Fr.]
1. Terror mixed with detestation; a passion compounded of fear and hate, both strong.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
And after him owls and night ravens flew,
The hateful messengers of heavy things. Fairy Q.

Doubleless all souls have a surviving thought,
Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.

Me damp horror chill'd
At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed so bold. Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
Their pride is humbled, and their fear confest. Dry.

2. Dreadful thoughts.
I have sapt full with horrors;
Direness, familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.
Her gloomy presence faddens all the scene,
Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shivering.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree destitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [Popr, Saxon.]
1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,

Of God observ'd

The one just man alive, by his command, Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou beheld'st,

To save himself and household from amidst A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

3

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith; in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Swift.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,
And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'er take us all. Dryd. F.
Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a-day to prayers. Swift.

plain howdy's, to those few I am forced to correpond with. Pope.

Howsoever. adv. [from how and soever.]
1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare.

To trace the ways
Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wife. Milton.
2. At all events; happen what will; at least:
Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy,
if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest. Tillotson.
3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.
In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way. Dryden.
Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are howe'er at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison on Italy.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, howe'er I do not exclude it. Atterb.
Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end;
which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

To Howl. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo, Latin.]
1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howl'd in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.
If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,
Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuter. xxxiii. 10.
As when a fort of wolves infect the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light. Waller.

Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns. Smith.

2. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab. Jer. xlviii.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.
Each new morn
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows Strike Heaven on the face. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shak. Mac.
The noise grows louder still:
Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heavens.

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

3. To speak with a belline cry or tone.
Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in deserts! Philips.

boat and a ship, is hard. Watts's Logick.

Hu'brub. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or bobnob.] A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people. Clarendon.

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning founds, and voices all confus'd,
Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when she shines in water. Hudib.

lar; hu'ckster, a shoe pedlar.]
1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more infamous trade than the being hu'cksters to such vile merchandise.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hu'cksters of souls, the very shame of religion. South.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down
you fall,
And overturn the scolding hu'cksters stall,
The scolding hu'ckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown. Gay.

There should be a confederacy of all servants, to drive those China hu'cksters from the doors. Swift.
Those hu'cksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass-money is made current. Swift.

Our adversary, buddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion. Locke.

To Huddle. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.
Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so buddl'd on his back,
Enough to press a royal merchant down. Shaksp.
Brown answered after his blunt and buddling manner. Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The buddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.
Their eyes are more imperfect than others; for they will run against things, and buddling forwards, fall from high places. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Hu'ddle. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotolian philosophy is a buddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest. Glanville.

Your carrying business in a buddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model. Hudibras.
Nature doth nothing in a buddle. L'Estrange.
The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a buddle. Locke.

Several merry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a buddle of ideas. Addison.

Hue. n. f. [Diece, Saxon.]
1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady she before did view,
Or that dread Lyon's look her cast in deadly hue. Spenser.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess. Shak. King John.
Flow'rs of all hue, and without thorn the rose. Milton.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view. Dryden.
2. [Hue, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country, It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone. Shakespeare.
Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road. L'Estrange.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry. Addison.
The hue and cry went after Jack, to apprehend him dead or alive, wherever he could be found. Arbutnot's John Bull.

Hue'r. n. f. [huer, French, to cry.] One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard. Carew's Survey.

Huff. n. f. [from hove, or hown, swelled:
he is huff'd up by distempers. So in some provinces we still say the bread huff's up, when it begins to beave or ferment: huff, therefore, may be ferment.
To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Vol. I. No. 22. 5 P Quoth

HUG

Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To wear by, only in a lord;
In others it is but a buff,
To vapour with instead of proof. Hudibras.
His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose buff.
All hats, as in a storm, flew off. Hudibras.
We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very buff of our greatness.
L'Estrange.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the buff about his extraction. L'Estrange.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present buff. South.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.

As for you, colonel buff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plotter.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
Lewd shallow-brained buffs make: Atheism and contempt of religion the soft badge and character of wit. South.

To HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be buffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe. Grew.

2. To hector; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.

The commissioner at Magdalen college said to
Dr. Hough, You must not presume to buff us.

To HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm; to bounce, to swell with indignation or pride.

A buffing, shining, flattering, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.

A thief and justice, fool and knave,
A buffing officer and slave. Hudibras.

Buffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to credulous fools a knave. Rose.

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them buff at this doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them. South.

Now what's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his buffing play? Dryden.

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those buffing opinions they are swelled with. Locke.

When Peg received John's message, she buffed and stormed like the devil. Arbutnot's John Bull.

HUFFER. n. f. [from buff.] A blusterer; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,

By such a braggadocio buffer. Hudibras.

HUFFISH. adj. [from buff.] Arrogant; insolent; hectoring.

HUFFISHLY. adv. [from buffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying bluster.

HUFFISHNESS. n. f. Petulance; arrogance;
noisy bluster.

To HUG. v. a. [Pegian, Saxon, to hedge, to inclose.]

1. To press, close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And hug'd me in his arms. Shakespeare.

What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a ferenade! L'Estrange.

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.

King Xerxes was enamoured upon an oak,
which he would hug and kiss. Harvey on Consump.

2. To fondle; to treat with tenderness.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unpalatable,
Win me into the easy hearted man,

And hug him into snares. Milton.

We hug deformities, if they bear our names.

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling book. Rose.

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love the impostor, and with both arms bug the abuse. South.

HUL

Mark with what joy he bugs the dear discovery!

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly bug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them. Atterbury.

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG. n. f. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close bugs? I owe my shame to him.

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cor- nish bug.

HUGE. adj. [boegb, bigb, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the state of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared; with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them? Hooker.

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe and Africa, but America. Abbot.

2. Very great.

The mountain huge.

Part, huge of bulk!

Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there Leviathan

Hugest of living creatures, in the deep
Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land. Milton.

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.

Through forests huge, and long unravell'd heaths,
With desolation brown he wanders waste. Thompson.

HUGELY. adv. [from huge.]

1. Immensely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?

Doth it not flow as bugly as the sea? Shakespeare.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am bugly bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in affairs, it is for our good.

HUGENESS. n. f. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness of your unworthy thinking. Shakespeare.

HUGGERMUGGER. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bugger mocker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by Sir Thomas More, hoker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, croag grained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark.
I know not how to determine.] Secrecy; bye-place.

Now hold in buggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of goods and land.

But if I can but find them out,
Where e'er th' in buggermugger lurk,

I'll make them rue their handy-work. Hudibras.

There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and barefaced, and a thing that's done in bugger- mugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.

HUGV. adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great; huge.

Not in use.

This bugy rock one finger's force apparently will move. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HUKE. n. f. [luque, Fr.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger in a rich huke. Bacon.

HULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch; Pulc, Saxon.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a bulk better stuffed in the hold. Shakespeare.

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the bulks, fails, and mariners of their spy-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbutnot.

HUL

They Argo's bulk will tax,
And scrape her pitchy fides for wax. Swift.

The footy bulk

Steer'd sluggish on. Thomson.

2. Any thing bulky and unweildy. This sense is still retained in Scotland; as, a bulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the bulk fir John,
Is prisoner to your son. Shakespeare.

To HULK. v. a. To exenterate: as, to bulk a hare. Ainsworth.

HULL. n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The hulk or integument of any thing; the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [Hule, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship: the hulk. Hull and bulk are now confounded; but bulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their bulks our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

So many arts hath the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the bulk and tackle of a thinking creature. Grew.

To HULL. v. a. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness: a ship, or rather the carcase of the ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, bullying there, part broken, part burned, and part drowned. Sidney.

Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

—No, good swabber, I am to bulk here a little longer. Shakespeare.

He look'd, and saw the ark bulk on the flood.

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come bullying toward them. L'Estrange.

HULLY. adj. [from bulk.] Siliqueous; bulky.

HULLY. n. f. Holly.

Save and bulver and thorns, thereof sail for to make. Tulip.

To HUM. v. a. [hummeln, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing. Ba-

An airy nation flew,
Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew.

In Summer's heat.

So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers lift the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waken city grows. Dryden.

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing found.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Comminius, much unhearts me.

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.

The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And bums; as who should say, You'll rue.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And bumm'd upon it, thus he writ. Hudibras.

I still acquiesce,

And never bumm'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffled treason. Hudibras.

The man lay bumming and hawing a good while;
but, in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians. L'Estrange.

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate bummings; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs. Clayville.

Still bumming on, their drowsy course they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep.

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune.

6. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.

To black Hecate's summons

The shard-born beetle, with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shak. Macbeth.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who mules through the woods at noon.

Thomson.

2. A low confused noise, as of bustling crowds at a distance.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb of night,

The hum of either army stilly sounds. Shakesp.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the busy hum of men. Milton.

One theatre there is of vast resort,

Which whilome of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon till night. Dry.
3. Any low dull noise.

Who sit the nearest, by the words o'ercome,
Slept fast; the distant nodded to the hum. Pope.
4. A pause with an inarticulate sound.

These thrugs, these hums and haws,
When you have said the's goodly, come between,
Ere you can say she's honest. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Your excuses want some grains to make 'em current: hum and ha will not do the business.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. In Hudibras it seems used for hum.

And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did stew their meat between their hums,
And the horses backs o'er which they straddle,
And ev'ry man eat up his fiddle. Hudibras.

6. An expression of applause.

You hear a hum in the right place. Spektator.
HUM. interj. A sound implying doubt and deliberation.

Let not your ears despise the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

See fir Robert—hum!

And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.
HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humanus, Fr.]

1. Having the qualities of a man.
It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature?

Swift.

2. Belonging to man.

The king is but a man as I am: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; all his senses have but human conditions. Shakespeare.

For man to tell how human life began
Is hard; for who himself beginning knew?

Milton.

Thee, serpent, subtil'st beast of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice indu'd. Milton.

Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the highest of all human certainty. Locke.

HUMAN. adj. [humane, Fr.] Kind; civil;
benevolent; good-natured.

Love of others, if it be not spent upon a few, doth naturally spread itself towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.

Envy, malice, covetousness, and revenge, are abolished: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their stead. Spratt.

HUMANELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly;
with good-nature.

If they would yield us the superfluous, while it were wholesome, we might guess they relieved us humanely. Shakespeare.

HUMANIST. n. f. [humaniste, Fr.] A philolo-ger; a grammarian: a term used in the schools of Scotland.

HUMANITY. n. f. [humanitas, Fr. humanitas, Lat.]

1. The nature of man.

Look to thyself; reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer spirit never did steer humanity Shak.
The middle of humanity thou never knewest, but the extremity of both ends. Shakespeare.

To preserve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been used the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown.

2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.

If he can untie those knots, he is able to teach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his informations. Glanville.

3. Benevolence; tenderness.
All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendship in diversity of opinions. Locke.

How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of soft humanity?
Like thee reserve their raiment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with those that weep?

Rowe.

4. Philology; grammatical studies. In Scotland, humaniores literae.

To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humaniser, Fr.] To soften; to make susceptible of tenderness or benevolence.

Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in showers shall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Watson.

Was it the business of magic to humanize our natures with compassion, forgiveness, and all the instances of the most extensive charity? Addison.

HUMANKIND. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.

Blest with a taste exact, yet unconfin'd;
A knowledge both of books and humankind. Pope.
HUMANLY. adv. [from human.]

1. After the notions of men; according to the power of men.

Thus the present happy prospect of our affairs,
humanly speaking, may seem to promise. Atterbury.
2. Kindly; with good-nature. This is now written humanely.

Though learn'd, well bred; and though well bred, sincere;
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

HUMBIRD. n. f. [from hum and bird.] The humming bird.

All ages have conceived the wren the least of birds, yet our own plantations have shewed us one far less; that is, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle. Brown.

HUMBLE. adj. [humile, Fr. humilis, Lat.]

1. Not proud; modest; not arrogant.
And mighty proud to humble weak does yield.

Spenser.

Now we have shewn our power,
Let us seem humbler after it is done,
Than when it was a-doing. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Thy humble servant vows obedience,
And faithful service, 'till the point of death.

Shakespeare.

We should be as humble in our imperfections and sins as Christ was in the fulness of the spirit, great wisdom, and perfect life. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

You, if an humble husband, may request,
Provide and order all things for the best. Dryd.
Ten thousand trifles light as these,
Nor can my rage nor anger move:

She should be humble, who would please;
And the must suffer, who can love. Prior.

2. Low; not high; not great.
Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow-poet, Cowley, mark!

Above the skies let thy proud musick sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.
Denied what ev'ry wretch obtains of fate,
An humble roof and an obscure retreat. Tallden.

Ah! prince, hadst thou but known the joys which dwell
With humbler fortunes, thou wouldst curse thy royalty!

Rowe.

Far humbler titles suit my lost condition. Smith.
To HUMBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make humble; to make submissive; to make to bow down with humility.

Take this purse, thou whom the heaven's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shak. King Lear.

The executioner

Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck,
But first begs pardon. Shak. As you like it.

Humble yourselves under the mighty hand of God,
that he may exalt you. 1 Pet. v. 6.

Hezekiah humbled himself for the pride of his heart. 2 Chron.

Why do I humble thus myself, and suing
For peace, reap nothing but repulse and hate. Milt.
Let the sinner put away the evil of his doings,
and humble himself by a speedy and sincere repentance; let him return to God, and then let him be assured that God will return to him. Rogers.

2. To crush; to break; to subdue; to mortify Yearly injoin'd, some say, to undergo
This annual humbling certain number'd days,
To dash their pride and joy, for man seduc'd. Milt.

We are pleased, by some implicit kind of revenge, to see him taken down and humbled in his reputation, who had so far raised himself above us.

Addison.

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth. Addis.

Men that make a kind of insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Freelholder.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
Though double tax'd, how little have I lost! Pope.

3. To make to condescend.

This would not be to condescend to their capacities, when he humbles himself to speak to them, but to lose his design in speaking. Locke.

4. To bring down from an height.

In process of time the highest mountains may be humbled into valleys; and again, the lowest valleys exalted into mountains. Hakewill on Providence.

HUMBLEBEE. n. f. [hum and bee.] What may be the true etymology of this word, I am in doubt.
The humbeeb is known to have no sting. The Scotch call a cow without horns a humble cow; so that the word seems to signify inermis, wanting the natural weapons. Dr. Beattie. A buzzing wild bee.

The honeybags steal from the humbeebes,
And for night tapers crop their waxen thighs.

Shakespeare.

This puts us in mind once again of the humbebes and the tinderboxes. Atterbury.
HUMBLEBEE. n. f. An herb. Dispositio.

HUMBLEBEE EATER. n. f. A fly that eats the humbeeb. Ansforth.
HUMBLENESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humility;
absence of pride.

With how true humbleness!

They look'd down to triumph over pride! Sidney.
I am rather with all subjected humbleness, to thank her excellencies, since the duty thereunto gave me rather heart to save myself, than to receive thanks.

Sidney.

It was answered by us all, in all possible humbleness; but yet with a countenance, that we knew that he spoke it but merrily. Bacon.

A grain of glory, mixt with humbleness,
Cures both a fever and lethargickness. Herbert.

HUMBLER. n. f. [from humble.] One that humbles or subdues himself or others.

HUMBLEMOUTHED. adj. [humble and mouth.]
Mild; meek.

You are meek and humblemouth'd; but your heart is cramm'd with arrogance, spleen and pride.

Shakespeare.

HUMBLEPLANT. n. f. A species of sensitive plant.

The humbleplant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, it prostrates itself on the ground, and in a short time elevates itself again: it is raised in hotbeds. Mortimer.

HUMBLER. n. f. Entrails of a deer.
HUMBLESS. n. f. [from humble.] Humbleness; humility. Obsolete.

And with meek humbleness, and afflicted mood,
Pardon for thee, and grace for me intreat. Spenser.
HUMBLV. adv. [from humble.]

1. Without pride; with humility; modestly; with timorous modesty.

They were us'd to bend,
To send their smiles before them to Achilles,
To come humblly as they us'd to creep to holy altars.

Here the tam'd Euphrates humblly glides,
And there the Rhine submits her swelling tides.

Write him down a slave, who, humblly proud,
With presents begs preferments from the crowd.

In midst of dangers, fears, and death,
Thy goodness I'll adore;
And praise thee for thy mercies past,
And humblly hope for more.

2. Without height; without elevation.
HUMIDRUM. adj. [from hum, drone, or humming
drone] Dull; dronish; stupid.

Shall we, quoth she, stand still humdrum,
And fee stout Brain all alone,
By numbers basely overthrown?

I was talking with an old humdrum fellow, and,
before I had heard his story out, was called away
by business.

To HUMECT. } v. a. [humecto, Lat. bu-
To HUMECTATE. } me, Fr.] To wet; to moisten.

The Nile and Niger do not only moisten and contemperate the air by their exhalations, but refresh and humectate the earth by their annual inundations.

Her rivers are divided into sluices, to humectate
the bordering soil.

The medicaments are of a cool humecting quality,
and not too much astringent.

HUMECTATION. n. f. [humectation, Fr. from humectate.] The act of wetting; moistening.

Plates of brass, applied to a blow, will keep it down from swelling: the cause is repercuSSION, without humectation, or entrance of any body.

That which is concreted by exiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humecta- tion, as earth and clay.

HUMERAL. adj. [humeral, Fr. from humerus,
Lat.] Belonging to the shoulder.

The largest crooked needle should be used, with a ligature, in taking up the humeral arteries in amputation.

HUMICUBATION. n. f. [hum and cubo, Latin.]
The act of lying on the ground.

Fasting and sackcloth, and ashes and tears, and humicubations, used to be companions of repentance.

HUMID. adj. [humide, Fr. humidus, Latin.]
Wet; moist; watery.

Iris there, with humid bow,
Waters the odorous banks that blow
Flowers of more mingl'd hue
Than her purpled scarf can shew.

The queen, recover'd, rears her humid eyes,
And first her husband on the poop espies.

If they slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid.

HUMIDITY. n. f. [humidite, Fr. from humid.]
That quality which we call moisture, or the power of wetting other bodies. It differs very much from fluidity, depending altogether on the congruity of the component particles of any liquor to the pores or surfaces of such particular bodies as it is capable of adhering to. Thus quick-silver is not a moist liquor, in respect to our hands or clothes, and many other things it will not stick to; but it may be called so in reference to gold, tin, or lead, to whose surfaces it will presently adhere. And even water itself, that wets almost every thing, and is the great standard of humidity, is not capable of wetting every thing; for it stands and runs easily off in globular drops on the leaves of cabbages, and many other plants; and it will not wet the feathers of ducks, swans, and other water-fowl.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this grofs watry pumpkin.

O blessing-breeding fun, draw from the earth

Rotten humidity: below thy sister's orb Infect the air!

Young animals have more tender fibres, and more humidity, than old animals, which have their juices more exalted and relishing.

HUMILIATION. n. f. [French.]
1. Descent from greatness; act of humility.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood; for which cause there followed upon the latter an exaltation of that which was humbled; for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience.

Thy humiliation shall exalt
With thee thy manhood also to this throne.

2. Mortification; external expression of sin and unworthiness.

John fared poorly, according unto the apparel
he wore, that is, of camel's hair; and the doctrine he preached was humiliation and repentance.

With tears
Watering the ground, and with our sighs the air

Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek.

3. Abatement of pride.
It may serve for a great lesson of humiliation to mankind, to behold the habits and passions of men trampling over interest, friendship, honour, and their own personal safety, as well as that of their country.

HUMILITY. n. f. [humilité, French.]
1. Freedom from pride; modesty; not arrogance.

When we make profession of our faith, we stand; when we acknowledge our sins, or seek unto God for favour, we fall down; because the gesture of constancy becometh us best in the one, in the other the behaviour of humility.

I do not know that Englishman alive,
With whom my soul is any jot at odds,
More than the infant that is born to-night;

I thank my god for my humility.

What the height of a king tempteth to revenge,
the humility of a Christian teacheth to forgive.

The humility of the style gained them many friends.

There are some that use Humility to serve their pride, and seem Humble upon their way, to be the prouder

At their wish'd journey's end.

It is an easy matter to extol humility in the midst of honour, or to begin a fast after dinner.

As high turrets, for their airy steep,
Require foundations in proportion deep;
And lofty cedars as far upwards shoot,
As to the nether heavens they drive the root;

So low did her secure foundation lye,
She was not humble, but humility.

2. Act of submission.
With these humilities they satisfied the young king, and by their bowing and bending avoided
the present storm.

HUMMER. n. f. [from hum.] That which hums;
an applauder.

HUMORAL. adj. [from humour.] Proceeding from the humours.

This sort of fever is comprehended under continual humoral fevers.

HUMORIST. n. f. [humorista, Italian; humoriste,
French.]

1. One who conducts himself by his own fancy;
one who gratifies his own humour.

The notion of a humorist is one that is greatly pleased, or greatly displeased, with little things;
his actions seldom directed by the reason and nature of things.

This humorist keeps to himself much more than he wants, and gives his superfluities to purchase heaven.

2. One who has odd conceits.
The wit sinks imperceptibly into an humorist.

3. One who has violent and peculiar passions.
By a wife and timeous inquisition the peccant humours and humorists must be discovered and purged, or cut off: mercy, in such a case, in a king, is true cruelty.

HUMOROUS. adj. [from humour.]
1. Full of grotesque or odd images.
Some of the commentators tell us, that Marfya was a lawyer who had lost his cause; others that this passage alludes to the story of the satire Mar-fya, who contended with Apollo, which I think is more humorous.

2. Capricious; irregular; without any rule but the present whim.

I am known to be a humorous patrician; said to be something imperfect, in favouring the first complaint; haughty and tinder-like, upon too trivial motion.

Thou fortune's champion, that do'st never fight
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety.

He's humorous as Winter, and as sudden
As flaw's congeal'd in the spring of day.

O, you awake then: come away,
Times be short, are made for play;
The humorous moon too will not stay:

What doth make you thus delay?

Vast is his courage, boundless is his mind,
Rough as a storm, and humorous as the wind.

He that would learn to pass a just sentence on persons and things, must take heed of a fanciful temper of mind, and an humorous conduct in his affairs.

3. Pleasant; jocular.
Thy humorous vein, thy pleasing folly,
Lies all neglected, all forgot;

And penfive, wav'ring, melancholy,
Thou dread'st and hop'st thou know'st it not what.

HUMOROUSLY. adj. [from humorous.]
1. Merrily; jocosely.

A cabinet of medals Juvenal calls very humorously
concisum argentum in titulos faciesque minutat.

It has been humorously said, that some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit.

2. Capriciously; whimsically.
We resolve by halves, and unadvisedly; we resolve rashly, fililly, or humorously, upon no reason that will hold.

HUMOROUSNESS. n. f. [from humorous.]
1. Fickleness; capricious levity.

2. Jocularly; oddness of conceit.
HUMORSOME. adj. [from humour.]

1. Peevish; petulant.
2. Odd; humorous. In this sense it is less used.

Our science cannot be much improved by malquerades, where the wit of both sexes is altogether taken up in continuing singular and humor- some disguises.

HUMORSOMELY. adv. [from humorsome.] Pee-vishly; petulantly.

HUMOUR. n. f. [humeur, Fr. humor, Lat.]
1. Moisture.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze, which is very admirable, seeing it hath the per-spicuity and fluidity of common water.

2. The different kind of moisture in man's body, reckoned by the old physicians to be phlegm, blood, choler, and melancholy, which, as they predominated, were supposed to determine the temper of mind.

Believe not these suggestions, which proceed
From anguish of the mind and humour's black,
That mingle with thy fancy.

3. General turn or temper of mind.
As there is no humour, to which impudent poverty cannot make itself serviceable; so were there enow of those of desperate ambition, who would build their houses upon others ruin.

There came a young lord, led with the humour of youth, which ever thinks that good whole goodness he sees not.

King James, as he was a prince of great judgment, so he was a prince of a marvellous pleasant humour: as he was going through Lufen by Greenwich, he asked what town it was? they said Lufen.
He asked, a good while after, what town is this

HUM

we are now in? They said still it was Lufen: then, said the king, I will be king of Lufen.

Bacon's Apophthegms.

Examine how your humour is inclin'd, And which the ruling passion or your mind. Refc. They, who were acquainted with him, know his humour to be such, that he would never constrain himself.

In cases where it is necessary to make examples, it is the humour of the multitude to forget the crime, and to remember the punishment. Addison.

Good humour only teaches charms to last, Still makes new conquests, and maintains the past. Pope.

4. Present disposition.

It is the curse of kings to be attended By slaves, that take their humours for a warrant To break into the blood house of life. Shakespeare.

Another thought her nobler humour fed. Fairfax. Their humours are not to be won, But when they are impos'd upon. Hudibras.

Tempt not his heavy hand; But one submissive word which you let fall, Will make him in good humour with us all. Dryden.

5. Grotesque imagery; jocularly; merriment. In conversation humour is more than wit, easiness more than knowledge. Temple.

6. Tendency to disease; morbid disposition. He denied himself nothing that he had a mind to eat or drink, which gave him a body full of humours, and made his fits of the gout frequent and violent. Temple.

The child had a humour which was cured by the waters of Glastonbury. Fielding.

7. Petulance; peevishness. Is my friend all perfection, all virtue and discretion? Has he not humours to be endured, as well as kindnesses to be enjoyed? South.

8. A trick; a practice. I like not the humour of lying: he hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the humour'd letter to her. Shakespeare.

9. Caprice; whim; predominant inclination. In private, men are more bold in their own humours; and in comfort, men are more obnoxious to others' humours; therefore it is good to take both. Bacon.

To HUMOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gratify; to soothe by compliance. If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men; if to his men, I would curry with master Shallow. Shakespeare.

If I were Brutus now, and he were Cassius, He should not humour me. Shakespeare.

Obedience and subjection were never enjoined by God to humour the passions, lusts and vanities of those who are commanded to obey our governors. Swift.

You humour me, when I am sick; Why not when I'm splenetick? Pope.

Children are fond of something which strikes their fancy most, and fullen and regardless of every thing else, if they are not humoured in that fancy. Watts's Logick.

2. To fit; to comply with. To after age thou shalt be writ the man, That with smooth air could'st humour best our tongue. Milton.

'Tis my part to invent, and the musicians to humour that invention. Dryd. Pref. to Albion.

Fontainebleau is situated among rocks and woods, that give a fine variety of savage prospects: the king has humoured the genius of the place, and only made use of so much art as is necessary to regulate nature. Addison.

HUMP. n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bump. See BUMP.] The protuberance formed by a crooked back.

These defects were mended by matches: the eyes were opened in the next generation, and the bump fell. Taylor.

HUMPHACK. n. f. [bump and back.] Crooked back; high shoulders.

The chief of the family was born with a bump-back and very high nose. Taylor.

HUMPA'CKED. adj. Having a crooked back.

HUN

To HUNCH. v. a. [busch, German.]

2. [Hocker, a crooked back, German.] To crook the back.

Thy crooked mind within hunch'd out thy back, And wander'd in thy limbs. Dryden.

HUNCHBACKED. adj. [hunch and back.] Having a crooked back.

His person deformed to the highest degree, flattened, and hunchbacked. L'Estrange.

But I more fear Creon! To take that hunchback'd monster in my arms, Th' excrecence of a man. Dryd. and Lee's Oedip.

The second daughter was peevish, haggard, pale, with saucer-eyes, a sharp nose, and hunch-backed. Arbut. Hist. of John Bull.

HUNDRED. adj. [Pund, Pundne, Saxon; bondert, Dutch.]

The number consisting of ten multiplied by ten. A hundred altars in her temple smoke, A thousand bleeding hearts her pow'r invoke. Dryden's Æneid.

Many thousands had seen the transactions of our Saviour, and many hundred thousands received an account of them from the mouths of those who were eye-witnesses. Addison.

HUNDRED. n. f.

1. A company, body, or collection consisting of an hundred.

Very few will take this proposition, that God is pleased with the doing of what he himself commands, for an innate moral principle: whoever does so, will have reason to think hundreds of propositions innate. Locke.

Lands, taken from the enemy, were divided into centuries or hundreds, and distributed amongst the soldiers. Arbutnot.

2. A canton or division of a county, perhaps once containing an hundred manors. [Hund edum, low Latin; hundreds, old French.]

Imposts upon merchants do seldom good to the king's revenue; for that that he wins in the hundred, he loseth in the shire. Bacon.

For justice they had a bench under a tree, where Ket sat, and with him two of every hundred whence their companies had been raised: here complaints were exhibited. Hayward.

HUNDREDTH. adj. [Pundneontezogopa, Sax.] The ordinal of an hundred; the tenth ten times told.

We shall not need to use the hundredth part of that time, which themselves bestow in making invectives. Hosker.

If this medium is rarer within the sun's body than at its surface, and rarer there than at the hundredth part of an inch from its body, and rarer there than at the orb of Saturna, I see no reason why the increase of density should stop. Newton.

HUNG. The preterite and part. pass. of hang. A wife so hung with virtues, such a freight, What mortal shoulders can support! Dryd. Juv.

A room that is richly adorned, and hung round with a great variety of pictures, strikes the eye at once. Watts.

HUNGER. n. f. [Punger, Saxon; honger, Dutch.]

1. Desire of food; the pain felt from fasting.

An uneasy sensation at the stomach for food. When the stomach is empty, and the fibres in their natural tension, they draw up so close as to rub against each other, so as to make that sensation: but when they are distended with food, it is again removed; unless when a person fasteth so long as for want of spirits, or nervous fluid, to have those fibres grow too flaccid to corrugate, and then we say a person has fasted away his stomach. Quincy.

Thou shalt serve thine enemies in hunger and in thirst. Deut. xxviii. 48.

The sub-acid part of the animal spirits, being cast off by the lower nerves upon the coats of the stomach, vellicates the fibres, and thereby produces the sense we call hunger. Græw.

HUN

Something viscous, fat and oily, remaining in the stomach, destroys the sensation of hunger.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Any violent desire.

The immaterial felicities we expect, do naturally suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites and hungers for them, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Decay of Piety.

For hunger of my gold I dye. Dryden.

To HUNGER. v. n. [from the noun.]

That burry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore. Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is burried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That burry you away. Roscoe's Royal Convert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is buried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope's Pref.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not burry to your journey's end. Dryden.

HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult; precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible burries in England, Ireland was then almost quiet. Hayward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and burry of his rage; but must have displeased him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South.

After the violence of the burry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent burry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great burry. Ad.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual burry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement sounds with trampling feet,
And the mixt burry barricades the street. Gay.

HURST. n. f. [Dyrt, Sax.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ainsworth.

To HURT. v. a. preter. I hurt; part. pass. I have hurt. [Dyrt, wounded, Saxon; heurter, to strike, French.]

1. To mischief; to harm.
He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death. Revelations.

Virtue may be assail'd, but never hurt;
Surpriz'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd. Milt.

The Adonis of the sea is so called, because it is a loving and innocent fish, that hurts nothing that has life. Walton.

2. To wound; to pain by some bodily harm.
My heart is turn'd to stone: I strike it, and it hurts my hand. Shakespeare's Othello.

It breeds contempt
For herds to listen, or presume to pry,
When the hurt lion groans within his den. Dryden.

3. To damage; to impair.
See thou hurt not the oil and wine. Revelations.

HURT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Harm; mischief.

Carter adventured bravely, and received two great hurts in his body. Hayward.

The pains of sickness and hurts, hunger, thirst and cold, all men feel. Locke.

In arms and science 'tis the same,
Our rival's hurts create our fame. Prior.

3. Injury; wrong.
Why should damage grow to the hurt of the King? Ezra.

HURTER. n. f. [from hurt.] One that does harm.

HURTFUL. adj. [hurt and full.] Mischievous; pernicious.

Secret neglect of our duty is but only our own hurt: one man's contempt of the common prayer of the church of God may be most hurtful unto many. Hooker.

The hurtful hazle in the vineyard shun,
Nor plant it to receive the setting sun. Dryd. Geor.

HURTFULLY. adv. [from hurtful.] Mischievously; perniciously.

HURTFULNESS. n. f. [from hurtful.] Mischievousness; perniciousness.

To HURTLE. v. n. [hurter, French; urtare, Italian.] To clash; to skirmish; to run against any thing; to jostle; to meet in shock and encounter. Hammer.

The noise of battle hurled in the air. Shakespeare.

Kindness
Made him give battle to the lionses,
Who quickly fell before him; in which hurting,
From miserable slumber I awak'd. Shakespeare.

To HURTLE. v. a. To move with violence or impetuosity. This is probably the original of hurled. Obsolete.

His harmless club he 'gan to hurtle high,
And threaten battle to the fairy knight. Fairy Q.

HURTLBERRY. n. f. [biort bar, Danish.] Bilberry; bacca vitis idææ.

HURTLESS. adj. [from hurt.]

1. Innocent: harmless; innoxious; doing no harm.

Unto her home he oft would go,
Where bold and hurtless many a play he tries,
Her parents liking well it should be so;
For simple goodness shined in his eyes. Sidney.

She joy'd to make proof of her cruelty
On gentle dame, so hurtless and so true. Fairy Queen.

Shorter ev'ry gasp he takes,
And vain efforts and hurtless blows he makes. Dryden.

2. Receiving no hurt.

HURTLESSLY. adv. [from hurtless.] Without harm.

Your neighbours have found you so hurtlessly strong, that they thought it better to rest in your friendship than make new trial of your enmity. Sidney.

HURTLESSNESS. n. f. [from hurtless.] Freedom from any pernicious quality.

HUSBAND. n. f. [husband, master, Danish, from hous and bondi, Runick, a master.]

1. The correlative to wife; a man married to a woman.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper;
Thy head, thy sovereign. Shak. Tam. of the Shrew.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old lunes again: he so takes on yonder with my husband, and so rails against all married mankind. Shakespeare.

This careful husband had been long away,
Whom his chaste wife and little children mourn. Dryden.

The contract and ceremony of marriage is the occasion of the denomination of relation of husband.

2. The male of animals.
Ev'n though a snowy ram thou shalt behold,
Prefer him not in haste, for husband to thy fold. Dryden.

3. An economist; a man that knows and practises the methods of frugality and profit. Its signification is always modified by some epithet implying bad or good.

Edward I. shewed himself a right good husband; owner of a lordship ill husbanded. Davies on Incl.

I was considering the shortness of life, and what ill husbands we are of so tender a fortune. Collier.

4. A tiller of the ground; a farmer.
Husband's work is laborious and hard. Hub. Tale.

I heard a great husband say, that it was a common error to think that chalk helpeth arable grounds. Bacon.

In those fields
The painful husband plowing up his ground,
Shall find all fret with rust, both pikes and shields. Hakewill.

If continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work. Dryden's Georgicks.

To HUSBAND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with an husband.

Think you I am no stronger than my fex;
Being so father'd and so husbanded? Shak. Jul. Cæs.

If you shall prove
This ring was ever her's, you shall as easy
Prove that I husbanded her bed in Florence,
Where yet she never was. Shakespeare.

In my right,
By me invested, he compeers the best —That were the most, if he should husband you. Shakespeare.

2. To manage with frugality.
It will be pastime passing excellent,
If it be husbanded with modesty. Shakespeare.

The French, wisely husbanded the possession of a victory, kept themselves within their trenches. Bacon's Henry VII.

If thou be master-gunner, spend not all
That thou canst speak at once; but husband it,
And give men turns of speech. Herbert.

3. To till; to cultivate the ground with proper management.

A farmer cannot husband his ground, if he fits at a great rent. Bacon.

HUSBANDLESS. adj. [from husband.] Without an husband.

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears;
A woman, naturally born to fears. Shak. King John.

HUSBANDLY. adj. [from husband.] Frugal; thrifty.

Bare plots full of galls, if ye plow overthwart;
And compass it then, is a husbandly part. Tupper.

HUSBANDMAN. n. f. [husband and man.] One who works in tillage.

This Davy serves you for good uses; he is your serving-man, and your husbandman. Shakespeare.

The mule being more swift in his labour than the ox, more ground was allowed to the mule by the husbandman. Broom.

HUSBANDRY. n. f. [from husband.]

1. Tillage; manner of cultivating land.
He began with a wild method to run over all the art of husbandry, especially employing his tongue about well dunging of a field. Sidney.

Ask'd if in husbandry he ought did know,
To plough, to plant, to reap, to sow. Hubb. Tale.

Husbandry supplieth all things necessary for food. Spenser.

Peace hath from France too long been chas'd;
And all her husbandry doth lie on heaps,
Corrupting in its own fertility. Shakespeare. Henry V.

Her plenteous womb
Expresseth its full tilth and husbandry. Shakespeare.

The seeds of virtue may, by the husbandry of Christian counsel, produce better fruit than the strength of self-nature. Raleigh's History.

Husbandry the Spaniards wanting in the valleys of Mexico, could not make our wheat bear feed. Raleigh.

A family governed with order will fall naturally to the several trades of husbandry, tillage, and pasturage. Temple.

Let any one consider the difference between an acre of land sown with wheat, and an acre of the same land lying without any husbandry upon it, and he will find that the improvement of labour makes the value. Locke.

2. Thrift; frugality; parsimony.
There's husbandry in heaven;
The candles are all out. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

You have already saved several millions to the publick, and that what we ask is too inconsiderable to break into any rules of the strictest good husbandry. Swift.

3. Care of domestic affairs.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house. Shakespeare.

HUSH. interj. [Without etymology.] Silence! be still! no noise!

The king hath done you wrong; but hush! 'tis so. Shakespeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mute,
Or else our spell is marr'd. Shakespeare's Temp.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.] Still; silent quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still. The

HUS

The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As husb as death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.] To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
did blush;

Another seem'd envious or coy;

Another in her teeth did gnaw a rush;

But at these strangers presence every one did husb.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence; to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience boast,
As to be husb, and nought at all to say. Shakespeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;

But since you are a gentle convertite,
My tongue shall husb again this storm of war,
And make fair weather in your blust'ring land.

Speak softly;
All's husb as midnight yet. Shakespeare's Tempest.

My love would speak; my duty husbs me. Shakespeare.

When in a bed of straw we shrink together,
And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads, Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then husb my cares thus, and shelter me with love?

Husb'd as midnight silence go;
He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her fire at length is kind,
Calms ev'ry storm, and husbs ev'ry wind;
Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.

The court was husbed, and a whisper ran. Addis.

To HUSH up. v. a. To suppress in silence; to forbid to be mentioned.

This matter is husbed up, and the servants are forbid to talk of it.

HUSHMONEY. n. f. [husb and money.] A bribe to hinder information; pay to secure silence.

A dextrous steward, when his tricks are found,
Hushmoney sends to all the neighbours round;
His master, unsuspecting of his pranks,
Pays all the cost, and gives the villain thanks.

HUSK. n. f. [hulsch, Dutch, or huysken, from huys.] The outmost integument of fruits.

Do but behold yon poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall suck away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Sh.

Most feeds, in their growing, leave their husk
or rind about the root. Bacon's Natural History.

Thy food shall be
The fresh brook mussels, withered roots, and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Fruits of all kinds, in coat
Rough, or smooth rind, or bearded husks, or shell
She gathers; tribute large! and on the board
Heaps with unsparing hand.

Some steep their feeds, and some in cauldrons boil

O'er gentle fires; the exuberant juice to drain,
And swell the flatt'ring husks with fruitful grain.

Some when the prefs
Has drain'd the pulpos mafs, regale their swine.
With the dry refuse; thou, more wife, shalt steep
The husks in water, and again employ
The pond'rous engine.

Barley for ptisan was first steeped in water till it swelled; afterwards dried in the sun, then beat till the husk was taken off, and ground. Arbutnot.

Do not content yourselves with mere words, left you feed upon husks instead of kernels. Watts.

To HUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To strip off
the outward integument.

HUSKEN. adj. [from husk.] Bearing an husk;
covered with a husk.

HUSKY. adj. [from husk.] Abounding in husks; consisting of husks.

Most have found
A husky harvest from the grudging ground. Dryden.

With timely care
Shave the goat's shaggy beard, lest thou too late

HYA

In vain should'st seek a strainer, to dispart
The husky terrene dregs from purer milt. Phillips.

HUSSY. n. f. [corrupted from houfswife: taken in an ill sense.] A forry or bad woman; a worthless wench. It is often used ludicrously in slight disapprobation.

Get you in, hussy, go: now will I personate this hopeful young jade. Southern's Innocent Adultery.

HUSTINGS. n. f. [Dutch, Saxon.] A council; a court held.

To HUSTLE. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from hurtle.] To shake together in confusion.

HUSWIFE. n. f. [corrupted from houfswife.]
1. A bad manager; a forry woman. It is common to use houfswife in a good, and huswife or hussy in a bad sense.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

A huswife, that, by felling her desires,
Buys herself bread and cloth. Shakespeare's Othello.

2. An economist; a thrifty woman.

Why should you want?
The bounteous huswife, Nature, on each bush Lays her fulness before you. Shakespeare.

To HUSWIFE. v. a. [from the noun.] To manage with economy and frugality.

But huswifery the little Heav'n had lent,
She duly paid a groat for quarter-rent;
And pinch'd her belly, with her daughters two,
To bring the year about with much ado. Dryden.

HUSWIFERY. n. f. [from huswife.]
1. Management good or bad.

Good huswifery trieth
To rise with the cock;
Ill huswifery lyeth
Till nine of the clock.

2. Management of rural business committed to women.

If cheefes in dairie have Argus his eyes,
Tell Cidley the fault in her huswifery lies. Tusser.

HUT. n. f. [Dutch, Saxon; hute, French.] A poor cottage.

Our wand'ring fairs, in woful state,
To a small cottage came at last,
Where dwelt a good old honest yeoman,
Who kindly did these fairs invite
In his poor hut to pass the night.

Sore pierc'd by wintry wind,
How many shrink into the fordid hut
Of cheerless poverty!

HUTCH. n. f. [Dutch, Saxon; huche, French.]
A corn chest.

The best way to keep them, after they are threshed, is to dry them well, and keep them in hutches, or close casks.

To HUZ. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz;
to murmur.

HUZZA. interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The buzzas of the rabble are the same to a bear that they are to a prince.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; buzzas and hunting-horns never let me cool.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid flatters and of loud buzzas.

To HUZZA. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caldron of fat beef, and stoop of ale,
On the buzzing mob shall still prevail. King's Cook.

To HUZZA. v. a. To receive with acclamation.

He was buzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers.

HYACINTH. n. f. [hyacinthos; hyacinthe, Fr. hy- acinthus, Lat.]

1. A flower.

It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked; the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds.

HYD

The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom, Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope's Odyssey.

2. The hyacinth is the same with the lapis hya- rius of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg.

It is found of various degrees of deepness and pale-ness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour.

HYACINTHINE. adj. [hyacinthinus.] Made of hyacinths; resembling hyacinths.

HYADES. n. f. [hyades.] A watery constellation.

Then sailors quarter'd heav'n, and found a name
For ev'ry fix'd and ev'ry wand'ring star;

The pleiads, hyads. Dryden's Georgicks.

HYALINE. adj. [hyalinus.] Glassy; crystalline;
made glass; resembling glass.

From heav'n-gate not far, founded in view
On the clear hyaline, the glassy sea.

HYBRIDOUS. adj. [hybridus; hybrida, Latin.] Begotten between animals of different species.

Why such different species should not only mix gle together, but also generate an animal, and yet that that hybridous production should not again generate, is to me a mystery.

HYDATIDES. n. f. [from hyda.] Little transparent bladders of water in any part: most common in dropical persons, from a distention or rupture of the lymphducts.

All the water is contained in little bladders, adhering to the liver and peritoneum, known by the name of hydatides.

HYDRA. n. f. [hydra, Latin.] A monster with many heads slain by Hercules: whence any multiplicity of evils is termed a hydra.

New rebellions raise
Their hydra heads, and the false North displays
Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

Subdue
The hydra of the many-headed hissing crew. Dryden.

HYDRAGOGUS. n. f. [hydragos and agogos; hydragogus, Fr.] Such medicines as occasion the discharge of watery humours, which is generally the case of the stronger catharticks, because they shake most forcibly the bowels and their appendages.

HYDRAULICAL. adj. [from hydraulicus.] Relating to the conveyance of water through pipes.

Among the engines in which the air is useful, pumps may be accounted, and other hydraulic engines.

We have employed a virtuoso to make an hy- draulic engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels.

HYDRAULICKS. n. f. [hydraulica, water, and hydra, a pipe.] The science of conveying water through pipes or conduits.

HYDROCELE. n. f. [hydrocele; hydrocel, Fr.]
A watery rupture.

HYDROCEPHALUS. n. f. [hydrocephalus; hydro- cephalus, Fr.] A dropy in the head.

A hydrocephalus, or dropy of the head, is only incurable when the serum is extravasated into the ventricles of the brain.

HYDROGRAPHER. n. f. [hydrographer; hydro- grapher, Fr.] One who draws maps of the sea.

It may be drawn from the writings of our hy- drographer.

HYDROGRAPHY. n. f. [hydrographia; hydro- graphie, Fr.] Description of the watery part of the terraqueous globe.

HYDROMANCY. n. f. [hydromancy; hydromancy, hydromancy, Fr.] Prediction by water.

Divination was invented by the Persians: there are four kinds of divination; hydromancy, pyro- mancy, acromancy, and geomancy. Ayliffe's Parer.

HYDROMEL. n. f. [hydromel; hydromel, Fr.]
Honey and water.

Hydromel is a drink prepared of honey, being one of the most pleasant and universal drinks the northern

northern part of Europe affords, as well as one of the most ancient.

In fevers the aliments prescribed by Hippocrates were pitans and cream of barley; hydromel, that is, honey and water, when there was no tendency to a delirium.

HYDROMETER. n. f. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] An instrument to measure the extent and profundity of water.

HYDROMETRY. n. f. [ὕδωρ and μέτρον.] The art of measuring the extent of water.

HYDROPHOBIA. n. f. [ὕδωρ and φοβία; hydrophobic, Fr.] Dread of water.

Among those dismal symptoms that follow the bite of a mad dog, the hydrophobia or dread of water is the most remarkable.

HYDROPHOBIC. adj. [ὕδωρ and φοβία; hydrophobic, Fr.]

HYDROPHOBIC. adj. [ὕδωρ and φοβία; hydrophobic, Fr.]

1. Dropical; diseased with extravasated water. Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophobic water. Bacon's Nat. History.

The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm the hydrophobic earth hath drunk.

Dropical swellings, if they be pure are pellucid.

Dropical wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;

By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry.

One sort of remedy he uses in dropies, the water of the hydrophobic.

2. Resembling dropical.

Some men's hydrophobic insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank.

Every lust is a kind of hydrophobic distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst.

HYDROSTATICAL. adj. [ὕδωρ and στατικός.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst.

HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics.

The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, doth always contain an equal quantity of solid mafs.

HYDROSTATICS. n. f. [ὕδωρ and στατική; hydrostatic, Fr.] The science of weighing fluids; weighing bodies in fluids.

HYDROTIC. n. f. [ὕδωρ; hydratic, French.] Purger of water or phlegm.

He seems to have been the first who divided purges into hydratics and purgers of bile.

HYENA. n. f. [byena, Fr. byena, Latin.] An animal like a wolf, said fabulously to imitate human voices.

I will weep when you are disposed to be merry;
I will laugh like a byena when you are inclined to sleep.

A wonder more amazing would we find;
Th' byena shews it, of a double kind:

Varying the sexes in alternate years,
In one begets, and in another bears.

The byena was indeed well joined with the beaver, as having also a bag in those parts, if thereby we understand the byena odorata, or civet cat.

The keen byena, fellest of the fell.

HYGROMETER. [n. f. ὕγρος and μέτρον; hygrometric, Fr.] An instrument to measure the degrees of moisture.

A sponge, perhaps, might be a better hygrometer than the earth of the river.

HYGROSCOPE. n. f. [ὕγρος and σκοπεῖν; hygroscopic, Fr.] An instrument to shew the moisture and dryness of the air, and to measure and estimate the quantity of either extreme.

Moisture in the air is discovered by hygroscopes.

HYLARCHICAL. adj. [ὕλη and ἀρχή.] Prefiding over matter.

HYM. n. f. A species of dog; unless it is by mistake for Lym.

Avant, you curs!
Mastiff, greyhound, mongrel grim,
Hound or spaniel, brache or hym;
Or bobtail tike, or trundle tail,
Tom will make him weep and wail.

HYMEN. n. f. [ὕμην.] 1. The God of marriage.

2. The virginal membrane.

HYMENEAL. n. f. [ὕμην.] A marriage song.

And heav'nly choirs the hymeneal sung.
For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring;
For her white virgins hymeneal sung.

HYMENEAL. adj. Pertaining to marriage.

The fuitors heard, and deem'd the mirthful voice
A signal of her hymeneal choice.

HYMN. n. f. [ὕμνος, Fr. hymne.] An encomiastic song, or song of adoration to some superior being.

As I earst, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke should frame.
Our solemn hymns to fullen dirges change;
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarse.

When steel grows
Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made
An overture for the wars.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Farewel, you happy shades,
Where angels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνω.] To praise in a song; to worship with hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord
High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning prais'd
God and his works.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire.

HYMNICK. adj. [ὕμνικος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick notes
In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy.

To HYPER. v. a. [ὑπερβαίνειν.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hyperped since I saw you.

HYPERBOLICAL. n. f. [ὑπερβολή.] A figure by which words change their cases with each other.

HYPER. n. f. [ὑπερ.] A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick. A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hyper upon them again.

HYPERBOLA. [n. f. hyperbole, Fr. hyperbole and βόλος.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the ellipsis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolic section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolas very eccentric.

HYPERBOLE. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. υπερβολή.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: as, he runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him.

Terms uniquar d,
Which from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles. Shak-sp. Troil. and Cressida.

Taffata phrases, filken terms precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles; spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these Summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admired objects.

Hyperboles so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our fight,
They mount with truth, and make a tow'ring flight.

The common people understand rallery, or at least rhetoric, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense.

HYPERBOLICAL. adj. [hyperbolique, French; hyperbolick, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancellated in the middle with squares, with triangles before, and behind with hyperbolick lines.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolical or parabolical figure.

2. [From hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolical, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

HYPERBOLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolical.] 1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Scylla is seated upon a narrow mountain, which thrusts into the sea a steep high rock, and hyperbolically described by Homer as inaccessible.

HYPERBOLIFORM. adj. [hyperbola and forma.] Having the form, or nearly the form of the hyperbola.

HYPERBOREAN. n. f. [hyperboréen, French; hyperboricus, Lat.] Northern.

HYPERCRITICK. n. f. [hypercritique, French; ὑπερ κριτικός.] A critic exact or captious beyond use or reason.

Those hypercriticks in English poetry differ from the opinion of the Greek and Latin judges, from the Italians and French, and from the general taste of all ages.

HYPERCRITICAL. adj. [from hypercritick.] Critical beyond necessity or use.

We are far from imposing those nice and hypercritical punctilios, which some astrologers oblige our gardeners to.

Such hypercritical readers will consider my business was to make a body of refined sayings, only taking care to produce them in the most natural manner.

HYPERMETER. n. f. [ὑπερ μέτρον.] Any thing greater than the standard requires.

When a man rises beyond six foot, he is an hypermeter, and may be admitted into the tall club.

HYPERSCAROSIS. n. f. [ὑπερσκαρώσις, ὑπερ and σκαρῶσις.] The growth of fungous or proud flesh.

Where the hyperscarosis was great, I sprinkled it with precipitate, whereby I more speedily freed the ulcer of its putrefaction.

HYPHEN. n. f. [ὑφήν.] A note of conjunction: as vir-tue, ever-living.

HYPO-TICK. n. f. [ὑπό τις.] Any medicine that induces sleep.

HYPOCHO'NDRES. n. f. [ὑποχονδρε, French; ὑποχονδρῶν.] The two regions lying on each side the

Vol. I. N^o. 23. 5 Q

cartilago eniformis, and those of the ribs, and the tip of the breast, which have in one the liver, and in the other the spleen. Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenteric arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and hypochondres; from whence such persons are called hypochondriack. Arbutnot on Aliments.

HYPOCHONDRIACAL. } adj. [hypochondriacque, Fr. from hypochondres.]

HYPOCHONDRIACK. } from hypochondres.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God: and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety.

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

HYPOCIST. n. f. [ὑπόκιστος; hypociste, Fr.]

Hypocist is an inspissated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe; the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPOCRISY. n. f. [hypocrisis, Fr. ὑπόκρισις.] Diffimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next stood hypocrisy with holy leer, Soft smiling and demurely looking down; But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryden.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, continued disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, Fr. ὑποκριτής.]

1. A diffempler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakespeare.

A wife man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Ecclus.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain; Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryd.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A diffempler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass

Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites, Who slyly speak one thing, another think, Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarn'd drink on, And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere. Philips.

HYPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.] Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical downcast look. Dryden. Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be esteemed an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.

HYPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With diffimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their profelytes and their religion. Gov. of the Tongue.

HYPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr. ὑπογάστρικός.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastick arteries. Wifeman.

HYPOGEUM. n. f. [ὑπόγειον and γῆ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were under ground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypostasis, Fr. ὑπόστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Son's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hammond.

HYPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

Let our Carneades warn men not to subscribe to the grand doctrine of the chymists, touching their three hypostatistical principles, till they have a little examined it. Boyle.

2. Personal; distinctly personal.

HYPOTENUSE. n. f. [hypotenuse, Fr. ὑποθέμενα.] The line that subtends the right angle of a right angled triangle; the subtense.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPOTHESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. ὑπόθεσις.] A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole appear unintelligible. See.

With imagin'd fov'reignty Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns:

He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise; And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wife, Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHETICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr. from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watt.

HYPOTHETICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Brown.

HYRST. } Are all from the Saxon hýrste, a wood or grove. Gibson.

HURST. }

HERST. }

HYSSOP. n. f. [byssope, Fr. byssopus, Lat.] A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the byssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in Scripture. Miller.

The byssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common byssop; for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls; but rather some kind of capillaries, which grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYSTERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, Fr. ὑστερικός.]

HYSTERICK. }

1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysterick women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Harvey. Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Floyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit, Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot and Pope.

HYSTERICKS. n. f. [ὑστερικός.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

J A C

I, Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as fine, thine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as sin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a or e it makes them long, as fail, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly to the true notion of a diphthong, or sound composed of the sounds of two vowels, than any other combination of vowels in the English language, as oil, coin. The sound of i before another i, and at the end of a word is always expressed by y.

I consonant has invariably the same sound with that of g in giant, as jade, jet, jilt, jolt, just.

I. Pronoun personal. [ik, Gothick; ic, Saxon; ich, Dutch.]

I, gen. me; plural we; gen. us. ic, me, pe, ur.

1. The pronoun of the first person, myself.

I do not like these several counsels, I. Shakespeare.

There is none greater in this house than I. Gen.
Be of good cheer, it is I; be not afraid. Mat.

What shall I do to be for ever known,

And make the age to come my own?

I shall like beasts to common people dye,

Unless you write my elegy. Cowley.

Hence, and make room for me. Cowley.

When chance of business parts us two,

What do our souls, I wonder, do? Cowley.

Thus, having pass'd the night in fruitless pain,

I to my longing friends return again. Dryden.

Of night impatient we demand the day,

The day arrives, and for the night we pray. Blackmore.

2. Me is in the following passage written for I.

There is but one man whom she can have, and that is me. Clarissa.

3 I is more than once in Shakespeare written for me, or yes.

Hath Romeo slain himself? Say thou but I,

And that bare vowel, I, shall poison more

Than the death darting eye of cockatrice. Shakespeare.

Did your letters pierce the queen?

—I, sir; she took 'em and read 'em in my presence,

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down. Shakespeare.

To JA'BBER. v. n. [gabberen, Dutch.] To talk idly; to prate without thinking; to chatter.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber

Of parties. Swift.

JA'BBERER n. f. [from jabber.] One who talks inarticularly or unintelligibly.

Out cant the Babylonian labourers

At all their dialects of jabberers. Hudibras.

JA'CENT. adj. [jacens, Latin.] Lying at length.

So laid, they are more apt in swagging down to pierce than in the ja-cent posture. Wotton's Arch.

JA'CINTH. n. f. [for hyacinth, Jerusalem for Hie-

rus l'm.]

1. The same with hyacinth.

2. A gem of a deep reddish yellow approaching to a flame colour, or the deepest amber. Woodw.

JACK. n. f. [Probably by mistake from Jagues, which in French is James.]

1. The diminutive of John. Used as a general term of contempt for saucy or paltry fellows.

You will perceive that a Jack gardant cannot

Office me from my son Coriolanus. Shakespeare.

J A C

I have in my mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise. Shakespeare. Merchant of Venice.

Every Jack slave has his belly full of fighting, and I must go up and down like a cock that nobody can match. Shakespeare.

2. The name of instruments which supply the place of a boy, as an instrument to pull off boots.

Foot-boys, who had frequently the common name of jack given them, were kept to turn the spit, or to pull off their masters boots; but when instruments were invented for both those services, they were both called jacks. Watts's Logick.

3. An engine which turns the spit.

The excellencies of a good jack are, that the jack frame be forged and filed square, that the wheels be perpendicularly and strongly fixed on the squares of the spindles; that the teeth be evenly cut, and well smoothed; and that the teeth of the worm-wheel fall evenly into the groove of the worm. Moxon.

The ordinary jacks, used for roasting of meat, commonly consist but of three wheels. Wilkins.

A cookmaid, by the fall of a jack weight upon her head, was beaten down. Wise-man's Surgery.

Some strain in rhyme; the muses on their racks

Scream, like the winding of ten thousand jacks. Pope.

4. A young pike.

No fish will thrive in a pond where roach or gudgeons are, except jack. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. [Jaque, Fr.] A coat of mail.

The residue were on foot, well furnished with jack and skull, pike, dagger, bucklers made of board, and slicing swords, broad, thin, and of an excellent temper. Hayward.

6. A cup of waxed leather.

Dead wine, that stinks of the borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

7. A small bowl thrown out for a mark to the bowlers.

'Tis as if one should say, that a bowl equally poised, and thrown upon a plain bowling-green, will run necessarily in a direct motion; but if it be made with a byass, that may decline it a little from a straight line, it may acquire a liberty of will, and so run spontaneously to the jack. Bentley.

8. A part of the musical instrument called a virginal.

In a virginal, as soon as ever the jack falleth, and toucheth the string, the sound ceaseth. Bacon.

9. The male of animals.

A jack ass, for a stallion, was bought for three thousand two hundred and twenty-nine pounds three shillings and four pence. Arbutnot on Coins.

10. A support to saw wood on. Ainsworth.

11. The colours or ensign of a ship. Ainsworth.

12. A cunning fellow who can turn to any thing, in the following phrase.

Jack of all trades, show and found;

An inverse burse, an exchange under ground. Chas.

JACK Boots. n. f. [from jack, a coat of mail.]

Boots which serve as armour to the legs.

A man on horseback, in his breeches and jack boots, dressed up in a comode and a night-rail.
Spe. Sator.

JACK by the Hedge. n. f. Erysimum.

Jack by the hedge is an herb that grows wild under hedges, is eaten as other fallads are, and much used in broth. Mortimer.

JACK Pudding. n. f. [jack and pudding.] A zani;
merry Andrew.

Every jack pudding will be ridiculing palpable weaknesses which they ought to cover. L'Estrange.

A buffoon is called by every nation by the name of the dish they like best: in French jean potage, and in English jack pudding. Guardian.

J A D

Jack pudding, in his party colour'd jacket,
Tosses the glove, and jokes at ev'ry packet. Gay.

JACK with a Lantern. An ignis fatuus.

JACKALENT. n. f. [Jack in Lent, a poor starved fellow.] A simple sheepish fellow.

You little jackalent, have you been true to us?

—Ay, I'll be sworn. Shakespeare. Mer. Wives of Windsor.

JACKAL. n. f. [chacal, Fr.] A small animal supposed to start prey for the lion.

The Belgians tack upon our rear,
And raking chafe-guns through our sterns they send:

Close by their fireships, like jackals appear,

Who on their lions for the prey attend. Dryden.

The mighty lion, before whom stood the little jackal, the faithful spy of the king of beasts. Arb.

JACKANAPES. n. f. [jack and ape.]

1. Monkey; an ape.

2. A coxcomb; an impertinent.

Which is he? Shakespeare.

—That jackanapes with scarfs. Shakespeare.
People wonder'd how such a young upstart jackanapes should grow so pert and saucy, and take so much upon him. Arbutnot.

JACKDAW. n. f. [jack and daw.] A cock daw;

a bird taught to imitate the human voice.

To impose on a child to get by heart a long scroll of phrases, without any ideas, is a practice fitter for a jackdaw than for any thing that wears the shape of man. Watts.

JACKET. n. f. [jaquet, Fr.]

1. A short coat; a close waistcoat.

In a blue jacket, with a cross of red. Hub. Talz.

And hens, and dogs, and hogs are feeding by;

And here a tailor's jacket hangs to dry. Swift.

2. To beat one's JACKET, is to beat the man.

She fell upon the jacket of the parson, who stood gaping at her. L'Estrange.

JACOB'S Ladder. n. f. Polemonium; the same with Greek valerian.

JACOB'S Staff. n. f.

1. A pilgrim's staff.

2. Staff concealing a dagger.

3. A cross staff; a kind of astrolabe.

JACOBINE. n. f. A pigeon with a high tuft. Ains.

JACTITATION. n. f. [jactito, Lat.]

1. Tossing; motion; restlessness; heaving.

If the patient be surpris'd with jactitation, or great oppression about the stomach, expect no relief from cordials. Harvey.

2. A term in the canon law for a false pretension to marriage.

JACULATION. n. f. [jaculatio, jaculor, Lat.] The act of throwing missive weapons.

So hills amid' the air encounter'd hills,

Hurl'd to and fro with jaculation dire. Milton.

JADE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is doubtful: Skinner derives it from gaad, a goad or spur.]

1. A horse of no spirit; a hired horse; a worthless nag.

Alas, what wights are these that load my heart!

I am as dull as Winter-starved sheep,

Tir'd as a jade in overladen cart. Sidney.

When they should endure the bloody spur,

They fall their crest, and, like deceitful jades,

Sink in the trial. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,

With torchstaves in their hand; and their poor

jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the head and hips.

Shakespeare.

J A G

So have I seen with armed heel,
A wight bestride a commonweal,
While still the more he kick'd and spur'd,
The less the fullen jade has stir'd.
The plain nag came upon the trial to prove those to be jades that made sport with them. L'Estrange.
False steps but help them to renew their race,
As, after stumbling, jades will mend their pace. Pope.

2. A forry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.
Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.
But she, the cunning 'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.
Get in, huffy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern's In. Adult.
In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.
You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.
The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.
The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; or upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation. Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass;
as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.
The honourable blood

Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shakespeare.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.
I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shakespeare's T. N.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.
Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the prosecution. South.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]
1. Vitious; bad, as an horse.
That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and throw us. Hudib.

When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe, Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.
'Tis to no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest. L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagau, slits or holes, Welsh.]
To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square,
and many jagged on the sides. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The jagging of pinks and gilliflowers is like the

J A M

inequality of oak leaves; but they never have any small plain curls. Bacon.

The banks of that sea must be jagged and torn by the impetuous assaults; or the silent underminings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagged. Watts.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many jaggis or escallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and jaggs in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.

JAGGED. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticulated.
His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes; Addison.

His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows. Addison.
Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy faults behind. Thomf.

JAGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagged.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jaggedness. Peascham on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL.
It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him. Sh.
A dependant upon him paid six thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew
'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.
One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain. Dryden.

JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, feeling and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jaiers. Sidney.

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects call,
And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryd. Æn.

Palamon, the pris'n'r knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;
And, with his jailer's leave, desir'd to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath. Dryden.

JAKES. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.] A house of office.
I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the walls of jakes with him. Shakel. K. L.

Their fordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes. Dryden.
Some have fished the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jakap, Fr. jalapium, low Lat.]
Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acrid and nauseous taste. It had its name jalapium or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras.
It is an excellent purgative where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hill's Mat. Med.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMBE. n. f. [jambe, Fr. a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.
No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the fore-side of the chimney jambs. Moxon.

J A R

IAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, Fr. iambicus, Lat.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venow lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To J'ANGLE. v. n. [jangler, Fr. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. Now
a low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his book-men. Shakespeare.

So far am I glad it did do fort,
As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakespeare.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, straining reason, they then publish to the world
matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To J'ANGLE. v. a. To make a found untuneably.
Now see that noble and that sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune and harp. Sh.

'Ere Gothick forms were known in Greece,
And in our verse ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Prior.

J'ANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

J'ANIZARY. n. f. [A Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizir, presuming to invest
The chief Imperial city of the West,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and janizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain. Waller.

J'ANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of hannock,] Oat-bread. A northern word.

J'ANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, French.]
Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flatterer: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Speccator.

J'ANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Lat.] The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, fignifying Providence. Peascham.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her bruth. Swift.

To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.

The god of fire
Among these gen'rous presents joins his part,
And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPANNER. n. f. [from japan.]
1. One skilled in japan work.

2. A shoemaker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes. Pope's Her.

To JAR. v. n. [from eojne, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or gurren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]

1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.
The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.
2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cure this great breach in his abused nature: Th.

JAR

Th' untun'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shaksp. King Lear.
I perceive you delight not in music,
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shaksp. Lear.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Rolcom.
He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid' a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.
3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.
At last, though long, our jarring notes agree.
Shaksp. Lear.

For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.
Venus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid force,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Roars horrible. Dryden's Æneid.
4. To quarrel; to dispute.
When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did
jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar.
Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

JAR, n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.
In, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Hold. Elem. of Speech.
2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.

He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subject are!

Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Hubb.
Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whose endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too
Shaksp. Lear.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Sw.

4. [Giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.

He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jar. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JARDES, n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside. This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light bellied.
It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches.

JARCON, n. f. [jargon, French; garconça, Sp.]
Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration, yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematics, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Br anball.

From this last toil again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as flows
That all his predecessor's rules

Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.
During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARONELLE, n. f. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JAU

JA'SHAWK, n. f. [probaby ias or eyas hawk.]
A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JA'SMYNE, n. f. [jessamine; jafmin, French. It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;

From jessamine grove to grove may'st wander. Thom.

JA'SMINE Persian, n. f. A plant. A species of lilac.

JA'SPER, n. f. [jaspé, Fr. iaspis, Latin.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill's Materia Medica.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow and white. Woodw.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLEPTICK, adj. [iatroleptique, Fr. iatros
and léptikos.] That which cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or jable, v. a. To bemoir; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary travelling and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL, n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.

When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying, That he who should have them was but a javel. What, says sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit?

JA'VELIN, n. f. [javeline, Fr.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantick deeds. Milt.

She shakes her myrtle jav'lin: and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.

Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addis.

JA'UNDICE, n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, Fr.]
A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscous, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastick arteries, which go off from the hepatic, to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?

Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,

'Till int'rest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the foul, tinct-ured with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED, adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infected spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT, v. n. [janter, Fr.] To wander here and there; to bustle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;

Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bollingbroke. Sh.

ICE

JAUNT, n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; flight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd fore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the night to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away posts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JA'UNTINESS, n. f. [from jaunt, or jaunty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airy-ness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntness of air I was once master of. Add.

JAW, n. f. [jawe, a cheek, French; whence joorwone, or cheekbone, then jarw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinale. Walton's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, saith that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immoveable.

More formidable hydra stands within,
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death. Psalm, xxii. 15.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws.

A meary foam works o'er my grinding jaws,
And utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame.

JAY, n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.] A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers,
Deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays,
Were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumpkin—we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shaksp. Lear.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,
Because his feathers are more beautiful? Shaksp. Lear.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush-hopping about my walks. Speator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings,
Or hears the hawk, when Philomela sings. Pope.

JA'ZEL, n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour. DiG.

ICE, n. f. [is, Saxon; eyse, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the fun. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shaksp.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative. Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat,
Atchieve the elder, set the younger free

For our access, whose hap shall be to have her,
We'll not so graceless be to be ingrate. Shaksp. Lear.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets. Peacocks on Drawing.

After he'd a while look'd wife,
At last broke silence and the ice. Hudibras.

To ICE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICT

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house.] A house in which ice is deposited against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

ICHNEUMONFLY. n. f. A sort of fly. The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects.

ICHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ichō and graphō.] The groundplot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichography of every story in a paper by itself.

ICHOR. n. f. [ichō.] A thin watery humour like serum.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous; fanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial fanious or ichorous exulceration.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthys and logos.] The doctrine of the nature of fish.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ichthys and phagō.] Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICICLE. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subiding powder, dried, retains some magnetical virtue; but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into icicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,
Long icicles depend, and crackling sounds are heard.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an icicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos.

ICINESS. n. f. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

ICON. n. f. [ikōn.] A picture or representation. Boyardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlands, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation.

ICONOCLAST. n. f. [iconoclastes, Fr. ikonoklastes.] A breaker of images.

ICONOLOGY. n. f. [iconologie, Fr. ikōnōlogia and lōgos.] The doctrine of picture or representation.

ICTERICAL. n. f. [ictérique, Fr. icterus, Lat.] 1. Afflicted with the jaundice.

In the jaundice the choler is wanting, and the icterical have a great sourness, and gripes with windiness.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.] 1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as, the icy phang,
And churlish chiding of the Winter's wind.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water they meet with in Summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her crows display
To the bright regions of the rising day;
Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll;
Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole.

2. Cold; free from passion.

IDE

Thou would'st have never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect. Shakespeare's Timon.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too.

IDE. Contracted for I would.

IDEA. n. f. [idē, Fr. idée.] Mental image.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea.

Happy you that may to the faint, your only idea,
Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts.

I did infer your lineaments,
Being the right idea of your father,
Both in your form and nobleness of mind.

How good, how fair,
Answering his great idea! Milton's Paradise Lost.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought,
The fairest nymph before his eyes he set.

IDEAL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material things; one real, when the thing, and the real impression thereof on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing, absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination.

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmutation is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

IDENTICAL. adj. [identique, Fr.] The same; IDENTICK. adj. implying the sameness; comprising the same idea.

The beard's th' identick beard you knew,
The same numerically true.

Their majus is identical with majis. Hale's O. of M.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehension, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inferring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram.

IDES. n. f. [ides, Fr. idus, Lat.] A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six day before the nones, and in the others four days.

A footlayer bids you beware the ides of March.

IDIOCRASY. n. f. [idiocrasie, Fr. idocrasie and idiocrasie.] Peculiarity of constitution.

IDIOCRATICAL. adj. [from idiocrasy.] Peculiar in constitution.

IDIOCY. n. f. [idiotie, Fr. idiotie.] Want of understanding.

I stand not upon their idiocy in thinking that horses did eat their bits.

IDIOM. n. f. [idiome, Fr. idiome.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; where in he followed their language, but did not comply with the idiom of ours.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach,
And to just idioms fix our doubtful speech.

IDIOMATICAL. adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to IDIOMATICK. adj. a tongue; phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanings by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking.

IDIOPATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, Fr. idiopathie and idiopathie.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another.

IDIOSYNCRASY. n. f. [idiosyncrasie, Fr. idiosyncrasie, and idiosyncrasie.] A peculiar temper or disposition of body not common to another.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties.

IDIOT. n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiote, Latin; idiote.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them idiots, or base wretches, not able to get relief?

By idle boys and idiots vilified,
Who me and my calamities deride.

Many idiots will believe that they see what they only hear.

IDOTISM. n. f. [idiotisme, Fr. idiotisme.] 1. Peculiarity of expression; mode of expression peculiar to a language.

Scholars sometimes in common speech, or writing, in their native language, give terminations and idiotisms suitable to their native language unto words newly invented.

2. Folly; natural imbecillity of mind.

IDLE. adj. [idol, Saxon.] 1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame! so much to do, and yet idle.

2. Not engaged; affording leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,
Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's sound
Was heard the world around,
The idle spear and shield were high up hung.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that, in a tempest, will rather perish than work; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share?

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

IDL

They astonish'd, all resistance lost,
All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,
Held idle thunder in his lifted hand.

Where was then
The power that guards the sacred lives of kings?
Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts,
Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees,
When vengeance call'd 'em here? Dryd. Span. F.
5. Unfruitful; barren; not productive of good.
Of antres vast, and deserts idle,
It was my hent to speak. Shakespeare's Othello.
The murmuring surge,
That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high. Shakespeare's King Lear.
He was met even now,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakespeare's King Lear.
6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he,
That all thine idle offers I refuse;
All that I need I have: what needeth me
To covet more than I have cause to use?

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and also repugnant to themselves.
They are not, in our estimation, idle reproofs,
when the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew?
His friend smil'd scornful, and, with proud contempt,
Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before.
He wishes to recal the precious hours he has spent in trifles, and loitered away in idle unprofitable diversions.

To IDLE. v. n. [from the adjective.] To lose time in laziness and inactivity.

Yet free from this poetick madness,
Next page he says, in sober sadness,
That she and all her fellow-gods
Sit idling in their high abodes.

IDLEHEADED. adj. [idle and head.]
1. Foolish; unreasonable.
These idleheaded seekers reforted thither.

2. Delirious, infatuated.
Upon this loss the fell idleheaded, and to this very day stands near the place still.

IDLENESS. n. f. [from idle.]
1. Laziness; sloth; sluggishness; aversion from labour.

Nor is excess the only thing by which sin breaks men in their health, and the comfortable enjoyment of themselves; but many are also brought to a very ill and languishing habit of body by mere idleness, and idleness is both itself a great sin, and the cause of many more.

2. Absence of employment.
All which yet could not make us accuse her, though it made us pine away for spite, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness.

He, fearing idleness, the nurse of ill,
In sculpture exercis'd his happy skill.

Nature being liberal to all without labour, necessity imposing no industry or travel, idleness bringeth forth no other fruits than vain thoughts and licentious pleasures.

3. Omission of business.
Ten thousand harms, more than the ills I knew,
My idleness doth hatch.

4. Unimportance; trivialness.
To the English court assemble now,
From ev'ry region, apes of idleness.

5. Inefficacy; uselessness.
6. Barrenness; worthlessiness.
7. Unreasonableness; want of judgment; foolishness; madness.

There is no heat of affection but is joined with some idleness of brain.

Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not
the name of a rope.

Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave!
I'll be adv. [from idle.]
1. Lazily; without employment.
I will slay myself,
For living idly here in pomp and ease.

2. Foolishly; in a trifling manner.
And modern Afigil, whose capricious thought
Is yet with stores of wilder notions fraught,
Too soon convinc'd, shall yield that fleeting breath,
Which play'd so idly with the darts of death.

3. Carelessly; without attention.
But shall we take the muse abroad,
To drop her idly on the road?
And leave our subject in the middle,
As Butler did his bear and fiddle?

4. Ineffectually; vainly.
Let this and other allegations, suitable unto it, cease to bark any longer idly against the truth, the course and passage whereof it is not in them to hinder.

IDOL. n. f. [idole, Fr. idolum; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was upon the altar of God.

2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock.

3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,
Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive;
So like the man, so golden to the fight;
So base within, so counterfeit and light.

4. A representation. Not in use.
Men beholding so great excellence,
And rare perfection in mortality,
Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldier's god, and people's idol.

IDO

IDOLATER. n. f. [from idole.] A lazy person; a suggard.

Many of these poor fishermen and idlers, that
are commonly presented to his majesty's ships, are so ignorant in sea-service as that they know not
the name of a rope.

Thou sluggish idler, dilatory slave!

IDOL. n. f. [idole, Fr. idolum; idolum, Latin.]
1. An image worshipped as God.
They did sacrifice upon the idol altar, which was
upon the altar of God.

2. A counterfeit.
Woe to the idol shepherd that leaveth the flock.

3. An image.
Never did art so well with nature strive,

Do her adore with sacred reverence,
As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.
He's honoured and lov'd by all;
The soldier's god, and people's idol.

IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, Fr. idolatra, Lattin.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways miserable:
first, in that which they worship they find no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

An astrologer may be no Christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism.

To IDOLATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.] To worship idols.

IDOLATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped.

IDOLATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred.

IDOLATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, Fr. idolatria, Latin.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd and ador'd;

And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statued in thy stead.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God.

IDOLIST. n. f. [from idole.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.
I to God have brought Dishonour, obloquy, and op'd the mouths
Of idolists and atheists.

To IDOLIZE. v. a. [from idole.] To love or reverence to adoration.
Those who are generous, humble, just, and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize.

Parties, with the greatest violation of Christian unity, denominate themselves; not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions.

IDONEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Lat.] Fit; proper;
convenient; adequate.
You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and then it ought to be conferred on an idoneous person.

IDYL. n. f. [idyllium; idyllium, Lat.] A small short poem.
1. E. for idyl, or, that is.
That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its apt-ness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour.

JE'ALOUS. adj. [jaloux, Fr.]
1. Suspicious in love.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure:
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self bounty, be abus'd: look to't.

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous
creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband!

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too haughty to endure neglected charms.

2. Emulous; full of competition.
I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.
I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.
I am jealous over you with godly jealousy.

His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of sagacity in it, or his restless and mutinous humour, transported him.

5. Suspiciously careful.
Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues.

They jealous of their secrets, fiercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protecting fate supreme.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's?

6. Suspiciously fearful.
'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys our peace.

While the people are so jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity.

JE'ALOUSY.

JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me. K. Charles.

JEALOUSY. n. f. [jaalousie, Fr. from jealous.] 1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their sight Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air, As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair; And shudd'ring fear, and green-ey'd jealousy! O love, be moderate; allay thy ecstasy. Shakespeare.

Why did you suffer Jachimo, Slight thing of Italy, To taint his noble heart and brain With needless jealousy? Shakespeare's Cymbeline. Small jealousies, 'tis true, inflame desire; Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire. Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands, he would take revenge upon him. Glendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

To JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day,

With his trainbands and mates, agree

To meet together where I lay,

And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering, which are called incencies and incivilities. Taylor.

To JEER. v. a. To treat with scoffs.

My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howell's England's Tears.

JEER. n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,

Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tip the forehead in a jeer,

As who should say—she wants it here;

She may be handsome, young, and rich;

But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JEERER. n. f. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.

JEERINGLY. adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.

He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are refracted? Derham.

JEGGET. n. f. A kind of sausage. Ansforth.

JEHOVAH. n. f. [יְהוָה] The proper name of God in the Hebrew language.

JEJU'NE. adj. [jejunus, Lat.]

1. Wanting; empty; vacant.

Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet melteth without much difficulty; the melting sheweth that it is not jeune, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.

2. Hungry; not saturated.

In grofs and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not in jeune, or limped water. Brown.

3. Dry; unaffecting; deficient in matter.

You may look upon an inquiry made up of mere narratives, as somewhat jeune. Boyle.

JEJUNENESS. n. f. [from jeune.]

1. Penury; poverty.

Causes of fixation are, the even spreading both parts, and the jeuneness or extreme comminution of spirits. Bacon.

2. Dryness; want of matter that can engage the attention.

JELLIED. adj. [See GELLY.] Glutinous; brought to a state of viscosity.

The kids that tips The jellied philtre of her lips. Cleaveland.

JELLY. n. f. [gelatinum, Lat. See GELLY, which is the proper orthography.]

1. Any thing brought to a state of glutinousness and viscosity.

They, distill'd

Almost to jelly with th' effect of fear, Stand dumb, and speak not to him. Shak. Hamlet.

2. Sweetmeat made by boiling sugar in the gelly.

The dessert came on, and jellies brought. King.

That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing;

Pray dip your whiskers. Pope's Sat. of Hor.

JENNETING. n. f. [corrupted from juncting, an apple ripe in June.] A species of apple soon ripe, and of a pleasant taste. Mortimer's Husbandry.

JENNET. n. f. [See GENNET.] A Spanish horse.

The Spanish king presents a jennet,

To shew his love. Prior.

To JEOPARD. v. a. [See JEOPARDY.] To hazard; to put in danger. Obsolete.

He had been accus'd of Judaism, and did boldly jeopard his body and life for the religion of the Jews. 2 Mac.

JEOPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JEOPARDY. n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j'ai perdu, or j'eu perdu. Skinner and Junius.] Hazard; danger; peril. A word not now in use.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel, Myself would offer you t' accompany,

In this adventure's chanceful jeopardy. Hubbard.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire:

Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakespeare.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To JERK. v. a. [gepeccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity

Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times I thought to've jerkd him here under the ribs. Sh.

Bafling heavy, dry, obtuse,

Only dulness can produce;

While a little gentle jerking

Sets the spirits all a-working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly.

This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet;

But, proud of being known, will perk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.

Contemn the silly taunts of fleeing buffoonry; and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glarville.

Wit is not the jerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;

His jade gave him a jerk,

As he would have his rider hurl

His hood after the kirk. Ben Jonson's Underwoods.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JERKIN. n. f. [cýntelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat.

A man may wear it on both sides, like a leather jerkin. Shakespeare.

Unless we should expect that nature would make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could the do better than afford us wool?

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered clothes, certainly he would have but small audience. South's Sermons.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,

And give thy outward fellow a firsing. Hudibras.

I walked into the sea, in my leather jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliver's Trav.

JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Ansforth.

This should be written gyrkin.

JERSEY. n. f. [from the island of Jersey, where much yarn is spun.] Fine yarn of wool.

JERUSALEM ARTICOKES. n. f. Sunflower, of which they are a species.

Jerusalem articokes are increased by small off-sets, and by quartering the roots. Mortimer's Husbandry.

JESS. n. f. [gecte, French; getto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hammer.

If I prove her haggard, Though that my jesses were her dear heartstrings, I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind To prey at fortune. Shakespeare's Othello.

JESSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed; Her neck, like to a bunch of cullambines;

Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;

Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

To JEST. v. n. [gejiclar, Lat.] To divert or make merry by words or actions.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclus. viii. 4.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided? —You may jest on; but I do not like these several councils. Shakespeare's Richard III.

JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure, Like pleasant travellers to break a jest

Upon the company you overtake? Shakespeare.

As for jest, there be certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy Scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break jests upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest.

When you the dullest of dull things have said, And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; laughing-stock.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shak.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-fer, which I dallied with, Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,

And giv'n in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakespeare.

When his play-fellows chose him their king, he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks. The skipping king, he rambled up and down With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;

Soon kindled, and soon burnt. Shak. Henry IV.

2. One given to farcasm.

Now, as a jest, I accost you,

Which never yet one friend has lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding; A jest, or licensed scoffer was kept at court to the time of Charles the First.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many thefts, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [zagar, Saxon; get, Dutch; gogutt, Latin.]

1. Jet is a very beautiful fossil, of a firm and very even structure, and of a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay. It is of a fine deep black colour, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannel-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard: and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.

Black, forsooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakespeare.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shak. Mer. of V.

The bottom clear,
Now laid with many a jet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her there,
Was known as black as jet.
One of us in glass is set,
One of us you'll find in jet.

Drayton.

Swift.

Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded.
2. [Jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.
Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end.

Thomson's Summer.

Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spurts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock.

Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.
What orchard unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jet?
To jet, v. n. [jetter, French.]

Tusser's Husb.

1. To shoot forward; to shoot out; to intrude;
to jut out.

Think you not how dangerous
It is to jet upon a prince's right?

Shakespeare.

2. To strut; to agitate the body by a proud gait.
Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes.

Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt; to be shaken. [Jetter, Fr.]
Upon the jetting of a hackney coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart.

Wise man.

[JETSAM, n. f. [jetter, Fr.] Goods or other JETSON, } things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral.

Bailey.

[JETTY, adj. [from jet.]
1. Made of jet.
2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black.

Brown's Vulgar Err.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curlsten thousand Cupids play'd, Pr.

Nigrini black, and Merdamente brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below.

Pope.

JEWEL, n. f. [joyaux, Fr. jewel, Dutch.]
1. An ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me 'tis my picture.

Shakespeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away.

Shakespeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and a portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world: a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel.

Saunders.

2. A precious stone; a gem.
Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stones;
Stol'n by my daughter!

Shak. Merchant of Venice.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great.

Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.
Bid farewell to your sisters.
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

JEWEL-HOUSE, or Office, n. f. The place where the regal ornaments are reposit.

The king has made him master of the jewel house.

Shakespeare.

JEWELLER, n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These grains were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller.

Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the intrinsic worth of a thing to a man of sense is another.

L'Estrange.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones.

Addison.

JEWEL-EARS, n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of fore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jewus-car groweth upon the lower parts of elder, and sometimes ashes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon.

JEWEL-HARP, n. f. A kind of musical instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which,
being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEWEL-MALLOW, n. f. [corchorus, Lat.] Ranunculus it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEWEL-STONE, n. f. An extraneous fossil, being the clavated spine of a very large egg-shaped feathering, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering to each end; generally about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter. It is ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria. Hill's Mat. Med.

IF, conjunctive. [gi; Saxon.]
1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs, or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion
Came like itself in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,

In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been here.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If I talk it thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor.

This feeling of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them suppose the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Tisiphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope's Statius.

2. Whether or no.
Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
But by this easy rise they all advance.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;

To which of these must Alma trust?
Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if she doubts or no.

3. Allowing that; suppose it be granted that.
Such mechanical circumstances, if I may so call them, were not necessary to the experiments.

1'GNEOUS, adj. [ignis, Lat.] Fiery; containing fire; emitting fire; having the nature of fire.

That the fire burns by heat, leaves us still ignorant of the immediate way of igneous solutions.

IGNIPOTENT, adj. [ignis and potens, Latin.] Presiding over fire. Vulcan is called the pow'r ignipotens.

IGNIS FATUUS, n. f. [Latin.] Will with the wisp; Jack with the lantern.

Vapours arising from putrid waters are usually called ignes fatui.

IGNITE, v. a. [from ignis, fire, Latin.] To kindle; to set on fire. A chymical term.

Take good firm chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it. Grew's Museum.

IGNITION, n. f. [Ignition, Fr. from ignite.] The act of kindling, or of setting on fire.

The laborant stirred the kindled nitre, that the ignition might be presently communicated. Boyle.

Those black circular lines we see on dishes, and other turned vessels of wood, are the effects of ignition, by the pressure of an edged stick upon the vessel turned nimbly in the lathe. Ray.

IGNITIBLE, adj. [from ignite.] Inflammable;
capable of being set on fire. Not in use.

Such bodies only strike fire which have sulphur or ignitable parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IGNIVOMOUS, adj. [ignivomus, Lat.] Vomiting
fire.

Vulcanos and ignivomous mountains are some of the most terrible shocks of the globe. Dehann.

IGNOBLE, adj. [ignoble, Fr. ignobilis, Lat.]
1. Mean of birth; not noble; not of illustrious race.

As when in tumults rise th' ignoble crowd, Mad are their motions, and their tongues are loud. Dryden.

2. Worthless; not deserving honour. Used of things or persons.

The noble isle doth want her proper limbs;
Her royal stock graft with ignoble plants. Shak.

IGNOMINIOUS, adv. [from ignobis.] Ignominiously; meanly; dishonourably; reproachfully; disgrace-fully.

To these, that sober race of men, whose lives
Religious, titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame

Ignobly! Milton's Paradise Lost.
Here, over-match'd in fight; in heaps they lie;
There scatter'd o'er the fields ignobly fly. Dryden.

IGNOMINIOUS, adj. [ignominiosus, Fr. ignominiosus, Latin.] Mean; shameful; reproachful; dishonourable. Used both of persons and things.

They with pale fear surpriz'd, Fled ignominious. Milton.
Cethegus, though a traitor to the state,
And tortur'd, scap'd this ignominious fate.

They gave, and she transferr'd the curs'd advice,
That monarchs should their inward soul disguise;
By ignominious arts, for servile ends;

Should compliment their foes, and shun their friends. Prior.

Nor has this kingdom deserved to be sacrificed to one single, rapacious, obscure, ignominious projector.

IGNOMINIOUSLY, adverb. [from ignominiosus.]
Meanly; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully;
reproachfully.

It is some allay to the infamy of him who died ignominiously to be buried privately. South.

IGNOMINY, n. f. [ignominie, Fr. ignominia, Latin.] Disgrace; reproach; shame; infamy;
meanness; dishonour.

Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heav'n:
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave. Shakespeare.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illandable, nought merits but dispraise
And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,
Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame.

Their generals have been received with honour after their defeat, yours with ignominy after conquest. Addison.

IGNORAMUS, n. f. [Latin.]

1. Ignoramus is a word properly used by the grand inquest impanelled in the inquisition of causes criminal and publick; and written upon the bill, whereby any crime is offered to their consideration, when they mislike their evidence as defective, or too weak to make good the presentment: the effect of which word so written is, that all farther enquiry upon that party, for that fault, is thereby stopped, and he delivered without farther answer.

2. A foolish fellow; a vain uneducated pre-tender. A low word.

Tell an ignoramus, in place and power, that he has a wit and an understanding above all the Vol. I. N^o 23. 5 R world, world, and he shall readily admit the commendation.

IGNORANCE, n. f. [ignorance, Fr. ignorance, Lat.]

1. Want of knowledge; unlearnedness.

If all the clergy were as learned as themselves are that most complain of ignorance in others, yet our book of prayer might remain the same. Hooker.

Ignorance is the curse of God, Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heav'n.

Still banish your defenders, 'till at length
Your ignorance deliver you,

As most abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows.

If we see right, we see our woes;

Then what avails it to have eyes?

From ignorance our comfort flows,

The only wretched are the wise!

2. Want of knowledge respecting some particular thing.

It is in every body's power to pretend ignorance of the law.

3. Want of knowledge discovered by external effect. In this sense it has a plural.

Forgive us all our sins, negligences, and ignorances.

Punish me not for my sins and ignorances.

IGNORANT, adj. [ignorant, Fr. ignorant, Lat.]

1. Wanting knowledge; unlearned; uninstructed; unenlightened.

So foolish was I and ignorant, I was as a beast.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time, and I feel now
The future in the instant.

2. Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears.

He that doth not know those things which are
Of use for him to know, is but an ignorant man,
Whatever he may know besides.

Fools grant what'er ambition craves,
And men, once ignorant, are slaves.

2. Unknown; undiscovered. This is merely poetical.

If you know aught, which does behove my knowledge

Thereof to be informed, imprison't not
In ignorant concealment.

3. Without knowledge of some particular.

Let not judges be so ignorant of their own right,
As to think there is not left to them, as a principal part of their office, a wife application of laws.

O visions ill foreseen! Better had I Lived ignorant of future! so had I borne
My part of evil only.

4. Unacquainted with. In a good sense.

Ignorant of guilt, I fear not shame.

5. Ignorantly made or done. Unusual.

Poor ignorant haubles, on our terrible seas
Like egg-shells now'd.

IGNORANT, n. f. One untought, unlettered, uninstructed.

Did I for this take pains to teach
Our zealous ignorants to preach!

IGNORANTLY, adv. [from ignorant.] Without knowledge; unskillfully; without information.

The greatest and most cruel foes we have,
Are those whom you would ignorantly save.

When a poet, an orator, or a painter has performed admirably, we sometimes mistake his blunders for beauties, and are so ignorantly fond as to copy after them.

To IGNORE, v. a. [ignor, Fr. ignorer, Latin.]

Not to know; to be ignorant of. This word Boyle endeavoured to introduce; but it has not been received.

Ignored not the stricter interpretation, given by modern critics to divers texts, by me alleged.

Philosophy would solidly be established, if men would more carefully distinguish those things that they knew from those that they ignore.

IGNOSCIBLE, adj. [ignoscibilis, Latin.] Capable of pardon.

JIG, n. f. [giga, Italian; geige, Teutonic, a fiddle.] A light careless dance, or tune.

When Cyrus had overcome the Lydians, that were a warlike nation, instead of their warlike musick, he appointed to them certain lascivious lays and loose jigs; by which he so mollified and abated their courage, that they forgot their former fierceness.

Though they be paid to be gone, yet needs will Thrust one more jig upon you.

Posterity shall know that you dare, in these jigsaw times, to countenance a legitimate poem.

All the swains that there abide,
With jig and rural dance resort.

The muses blush'd to see their friends exalting
Those elegant delights of jig and vaulting.

They wrote to her friends in the country, that she should dance a jig next October in Westminster-hall.

Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus reigns,
Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains.

To jig, v. n. [from the noun.] To dance carelessly; to dance. Expressed in contempt.

As for the jiggling part and figures of dances, I count that little.

JIG-MAKER, n. f. [jig and make.] One who dances or plays merrily.

Your only jig-maker! what should a man do but be merry?

JIGGUMBO, n. f. [A cant word.] A trinket; a knick-knack; a slight contrivance in machinery.

He rifled all his pokes and fobs
Of gimcracks, whims, and jiggumbobs.

JILT, n. f. [gilia, Islandick, to intrap in an amour, Mr. Ly.] Perhaps from giglat, by contraction; or gillit, or gillot, the diminutive of gill, the ludicrous name of a woman. 'Tis also called jillet in Scotland.

1. A woman who gives her lover hopes, and deceives him.

Avoid both courts and camps,
Where dflatory fortune plays the jilt

With the brave, noble, honest, gallant man,
To throw herself away on fools.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

When love was all an easy monarch's care,
Jilts rul'd the state, and statesmen farces writ.

To JILT, v. a. [from the noun.] To trick a man by flattering his love with hopes, and then leaving him for another.

Tell who loves who;
And who is jilted for another's sake.

Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted; bring witnesses of the falsehood of his mistress, and three kind words of hers shall invalidate all their testimonies.

To JILT, v. n. To play the jilt; to practise amorous deceptions.

She might have learn'd to cuckold, jilt, and sham,

Had Covent-garden been at Surinam.

To JINGLE, v. n. [A word made from jangle, or copied from the sound intended to be expressed.] To clink; to sound with a kind of sharp rattle.

What should the wars do with these jingling fools?

With noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
We were awak'd.

The bells the jingled, and the whistle blew.

You ne'er with jingling words deceive the ear;
And yet, on humble subjects, great appear.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old!

JINGLES, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any clink, or sharp rattle.

2. It is used, I think, improperly, to express the correspondence of sound in the effects of rhyme.

Vulgar judges are nine parts in ten of all nations, who call conceits and jingles wit.

3. Any thing sounding; a rattle; a bell.

If you plant where savages are, do not only entertain them with trifles and jingles, but use them justly.

ILEUS, n. f. [corrupted from aile, Fr.] A walk or alley in a church or public building. Properly aile.

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,
And arches widen, and long ile extend.

ILEUS, n. f. [aile, Fr.] An ear of corn.

ILEUS, n. f. [Latin.]

An ileus, commonly called the twisting of the guts, is really either a circumvolution, or inflection of one part of the gut within the other.

ILEX, n. f. [Latin.]

The ilex, or great scarlet oak, thrives well in England, is a hardy sort of tree, and easily raised of acorns. The Spaniards have a fort they call enzina; the wood of which, when old, is finely chambletted, as if it were painted.

ILIAC, adj. [iliacus, Lat.] Relating to the lower bowels.

The iliac passion is a kind of convulsion in the belly.

ILIAC PASSION. A kind of nervous cholera, whose seat is the ilium, whereby that gut is twisted, or one part enters the cavity of the part immediately below or above; whence it is also called the volvulus, from volvo, to roll.

Those who die of the iliac passion have their bellies much swelled.

ILK, adj. [ealc, Saxon.] The same. It is still retained in Scotland, and denotes each; as, ilk one of you, every one you. It also signifies, the same; as, Macintosh of that ilk, denotes a gentleman whose surname and the title of his estate are the same; as, Macintosh of Macintosh.

Shepherds, should it not yfherd
Your roundels fresh, to hear a doleful verse
Of Rosalind, who knows not Rosalind,
That Colin made? ilk can I you rehearse.

ILL, adj. [contracted from evil, and retaining all its senses.]

1. Bad in any respect; contrary to good, whether physical or moral; evil. See EVIL.

There some ill planet reigns;
I must be patient, 'till the Heavens look
With an aspect more favourable.

Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Neither is it ill air only that maketh an ill feat; but ill ways, ill markets, and ill neighbours.

Some of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company to be sad and ill disposed; others, of a jovial nature, dispose them to be merry.

2. Sick; disordered; not in health. I know not that evil is ever used in this sense.

You wish me health in very happy seasons;
For I am on the sudden something ill.

I have known two towns of the greatest consequence lost, by the governours falling ill in the time of the sieges.

ILL, n. f.

1. Wickedness; depravity; contrariety to holiness.

Ill, to man's nature, as it stands perverted, hath a natural motion strongest in continuance.

Young men to imitate all ills are prone;
But are compell'd to avarice alone:

For then in virtue's shape they follow vice.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill.

2. Misfortune; misery.

Who can all fense of others ills escape,
Is but a brute at best in human shape.

Though plung'd in ills and exercis'd in care,
Yet never let the noble mind despair;

When prest by dangers, and beset with foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;

And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief.

ILL, adv.

1. Not well; not rightly in any respect.

Ill at ease, both she and all her train
The scorching sun had borne, and beating rain.
Dryden.

2. Not easily; with pain; with difficulty.
Thou desir'st

The punishment all on thyself! alas!
Bear thine own first; ill able to sustain
His full wrath, whose thou feel'st as yet least part,
And my displeasure bear't so ill. Milton.

Ill bears the sex a youthful lover's fate,
When just approaching to the nuptial state. Dryd.

ILL, substantive or adverb, is used in composition to express any bad quality or condition, which may be easily understood by the following examples.

ILL, substantive.

Dangerous conjectures in ill breeding minds.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

I have an ill-divining soul:

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakespeare.

No look, no last adieu before he went!
In an ill-boding hour to slaughter sent. Dryd. Æn.

I know

The voice ill boding, and the solemn sound. Phil.
The wisest prince on earth may be deceived by the craft of ill designing men. Swift's Examiner.

Your ill meaning politician lords,
Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,
Appointed to await me thirty spies,
Who threaten'g cruel death, constrain'd the bride
To wring from me and tell to them my secret.

Milton.

A boy distinguish'd from his airy stand,
To bribe whose vigilance, Ægisthus told
A mighty sum of ill persuading gold.

Pope.

ILL, adverb.

There founded an ill according cry of the enemies,
and a lamentable noise was carried abroad.

Wisd. xviii. 10.

My colleague,

Being so ill affected with the gout,
Will not be able to be there in person. Ben Jonson.

The examples

Of every minute's instance, present now,
Have put us in these ill beseeching arms. Shakespeare.

Lead back thy Saxons to their ancient Elbe;
I would restore the fruitful Kent, the gift
Of Vortigern, or Hengist's ill bought aid. Dryden.

We simple toasters take delight
To see our women's teeth look white;
And ev'ry faucy ill bred fellow
Sneers at a mouth profoundly yellow.

Prior.

The ungrateful treason of her ill chosen husband overthrows her.

Sidney.

Envy, how does it look? How meagre and ill complexioned?

It preys upon itself, and exhausts the spirits. Collier.

There grows,

In my most ill compos'd affection such
A stanchless avarice, that, were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands. Shakespeare.

To what end this ill concerted lye,
Palpable and gross? Dryden's Don Sebastian.

Our generals at present are such as are likely to make the best use of their numbers, without throwing them away on any ill concerted projects.

Addison on the War.

The second daughter was a peevish, forward, ill conditioned creature as ever was.

Arbutnot.

No Persian arras hides his homely walls
With antick veils, which, through their shady fold,

Betray the streaks of ill dissembled gold. Dryden.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
*ill*ey'd unto you.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill fated loves. Addison's Cato.

Others ill fated are condemn'd to toil
Their tedious life.

Prior.

Plain and rough nature, left to itself, is much better than an artificial ungratefulness, and such studied ways of being ill fashioned.

Locke.

Much better, when I find virtue in a fair lodging, than when I am bound to seek it in an ill favoured creature, like a pearl in a dunghill. Sidney.

Near to an old ill favoured castle they meant to perform their unknighly errand. Sidney.

If a man had but an ill favoured nose, the deep thinkers would contrive to impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

I was at her house the hour she appointed.

—And you sped, sir?

—Very ill favouredly. Shakespeare.

They would not make bold, as every where they do, to destroy ill formed and mis-shaped pro-

Locke.

The fabled dragon never guarded more
The golden fleece, than he his ill got store. Dryden.

Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill gotten power,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself. Add.

Ill govern'd passions in a prince's breast,
Hazard his private and the public rest. Waller.

That knowledge of theirs is very superficial and ill grounded. Dryden's Despreux.

Ill grounded passions quickly wear away;
What's built upon esteem can ne'er decay. Walsh.

Hither, of ill join'd sons and daughters born,
First from the ancient world these giants came.

Milton.

Nor has he erred above once by ill judged superfluity. Garth's Ovid.

Did you never taste delicious drink out of an ill
look'd vessel? L'Estrange.

The match had been so ill made for Plexirtus, that his ill led life would have tumbled to destruction, had there not come fifty to his defence. Sidney.

Of those ill mated marriages thou saw'st,
Where good with bad were match'd. Milton.

The works are weak, the garrison but thin,
Dispirited with frequent overthrows,
Already wavering on their ill mann'd walls. Dryd.

He will not hear me out!
Was ever criminal forbid to plead?

Curb their ill manner'd zeal. Dryden.

It is impossible for the most ill minded, avaritious, or cunning clergyman to do the least injustice to the meanest cottager, in any bargain for tythes.

Swift.

Soon as the ill omen'd rumour reach'd his ear,
Who can describe th' amazement in his face! Dry.

The eternal law of things must not be altered,
to comply with his ill order'd choice. Locke.

When you expose the scene,
Down the ill organ'd engines fall,
Off fly the vizards. Swift.

For Phthia fix'd is my return;
Better at home my ill paid pains to mourn,
Than from an equal here sustain the public scorn.

Dryden.

There motly images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and similes unlike. Pope.

Sparta has not to boast of such a woman;
Nor Troy to thank her, for her ill plac'd love.

Dryden.

I shall direct you, a task for which I take myself not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end, to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relished potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
Her thoughts intentive on the bridal day. Pope.

Behold the fruit of ill rewarded pain.

Dryden.

The god inform'd
This ill shap'd body with a daring soul. Dryden.

There was plenty enough, but the dishes were ill sort'd; whole pyramids of sweetmeats for boys and women; but little of solid meat for men.

Dryden.

It does not belong to the priest's office to impose this name in baptism: he may refuse to pronounce the same, if the parents give them indi-

cious, filthy, or ill founding names. Ayliffe.

Ill spirited Worcester, did we not send grace,
Pardon and terms of love to all of you? Shakespeare.

From thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill starr'd love. Pope.

Ah, why th' ill suiting pastime must I try?
To gloomy care my thoughts alone are free:

Ill the gay sports with troubled hearts agree. Pope.

Holding of ill tasted things in the mouth will make a small salivation. Grew.

The maid, with downcast eyes, and mute with grief,
For death unfinished, and ill tim'd relief,
Stood fullen to her suit. Dryden's Ovid.

How should opinions, thus settled, be given up, if there be any suspicion of interest or design, as there never fails to be, where men find themselves ill treated? Locke.

That boldness and spirit which lads get amongst their play-fellows at school, has ordinarily a mixture of rudeness and ill turned confidence; so that these misbecoming and disengenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned. Locke.

It, before words beginning with l, stands for in.

ILLA'CHRYMABLE, adj. [illachrymabilis, Lat.]
Incapable of weeping. Dix.

ILLA'USE, n. f. [illuse, Lat.]

1. Gradual emission or entrance of one thing into another.

As a piece of iron red hot, by reason of the il- lapse of the fire into it, appears all over like fire; so the souls of the blessed, by the illapse of the divine essence into them, shall be all over divine.

Norris.

2. Sudden attack; casual coming.

Life is oft preserved
By the bold swimmer in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLA'QUEATE, v. a. [illaqueo, Lat.] To entangle; to entrap; to ensnare.

I am illaqueated, but not truly captivated into your conclusion. Mord's Divine Dialogues.

ILLAQUEATION, n. f. [from illaqueate.]

1. The act of catching or ensnaring.

The word in Matthew doth not only signify suffersion, or pendulous illaqueation, but also suffocation. Brown.

2. A snare; any thing to catch another; a noose.

ILLATION, n. f. [illatio, Lat.] Inference; conclusion drawn from premises.

Herein there seems to be a very erroneous illa- tion from the indulgence of God unto Cain, concluding an immunity unto himself. Brown's V. Er.

Illation so orders the intermediate ideas as to discover what connection there is in each link of the chain, whereby the extremes are held together. Locke.

ILLATIVE, adj. [illatus, Lat.] Relating to il- lation or conclusion.

In common discourse or writing such casual particles as for, because, manifest the act of reasoning as well as the illative particles then and there- fore. Watts.

ILLA'UDABLE, adj. [illaudabilis, Lat.] Unworthy of praise or commendation.

Strength from truth divided, and from just,
illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton.

bly, too favourable a judgment of their own country. Broome.

ILLE'GAL, adj. [in and legalis, Lat.] Contrary to law.

No patent can oblige the subject against law, unless an illegal patent passed in one kingdom can bind another, and not itself. Swift.

ILLE'GALITY, n. f. [from illegal.] Contrariety to law.

He wished them to consider what votes they had passed, of the ill quality of all those commissions, and of the unjustifiableness of the proceedings by virtue of them. Clarendon.

ILLE'GALLY, adv. [from ill-gal.] In a manner contrary to law.

ILLEGIBLE. adj. [in and legibilis, from lego, Lat.] What cannot be read.

The secretary poured the ink-box all over the writings, and so defaced them that they were made altogether illegible. Howell.

ILLEGITIMACY. n. f. [from illegitimate.] State of bastardy.

ILLEGITIMATE. adj. [in and legitimus, Lat.] Unlawfully begotten; not begotten in wedlock.

Grieve not at your state;
For all the world is illegitimate. Chevalier ind.
Being illegitimate, I was deprived of that endearing tenderness and uncommon satisfaction, which a good man finds in the love and conversation of a parent. Adelphi's Spectator.

ILLEGITIMATELY. adv. [from illegitimate.] Not begotten in wedlock.

ILLEGITIMATION. n. f. [from illegitimate.] The state of one not begotten in wedlock.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of his hatred to both his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretences, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimacy. Bacon.

ILLEVARIABLE. adv. [lever, Fr.] What cannot be levied or exacted.

He rectified the method of collecting his revenue, and removed obsolete and illeviable parts of charge. Hale.

O, what a world of vile illfavoured faults
Look handsome in three hundred pounds a-year! Shakespeare.

ILLFAVouredLY. adv.
1. With deformity.

2. Roughly; ruggedly: in ludicrous language. He shook him very illfavouredly for the time, raging through the very bowels of his country, and plundering all wheresoever he came. Howell.

ILLFAVouredNESS. n. f. Deformity.

ILLIBERAL. adj. [illiberalis, Lat.]

1. Not noble; not ingenuous.
The clarity of most men is grown so cold, and their religion so illiberal. King Charles.

2. Not munificent; not generous; sparing.
Yet subsist they did, and well too: an argument that that earth did not deal out their nourishment with an overparing or illiberal hand. Woodward.

ILLIBERALITY. n. f. [illiberalitas, Lat. from liberalis.]

1. Meanness of mind.

2. Parsimony; niggardliness; want of munificence.

The illiberality of parents, in allowance towards their children, is an harmful error, and acquaints them with shifts. Bacon.

ILLIBERALLY. adv. [from illiberal.] Disingenuously; meanly.

One that had been bountiful only upon surprise and incogitancy, illiberally retracts. Decay of Piety.

ILLICIT. adj. [illicitus, Lat. illicite, Fr.] Unlawful; as, an illicit trade.

To ILLICHTEN. v. n. [in and lichten.] To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Rabiah.

Corporeal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor disphonous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illighted. Rabiah.

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limit, Lat.] That which cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the subtiler heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idolatry direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown.

With what an awful world-revolting power, Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
The illimitable void! Thomson's Summer.

ILLIMITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITED. adj. [in and limit, Lat. illimité, Fr.] Unbounded; interminable.

ILLIMITEDNESS. n. f. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Charendon.

ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Lat.] Untered; untaught; unlearned; unenlighted by science.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Watson.

Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies
To minds diseas'd unsafe chance remedies:
The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,

Studies with care th' anatomy of man;
Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause,
And tame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first ages of Christianity not only the learned and the wife, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson.

ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning. A word not much used.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterate, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Ayliffe's Paragon.

ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament. Letterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great;
Art not without ambition; but without
The illness should attend it. Shakespeare's Macb.

ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and four and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that befalls another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominate a person illnatured, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnature'd task refuse;
Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Add. Ovid.

It might be one of those illnatured beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mold on their illnatured land Induce. Philips.

ILLNATUREDLY. adv. [from illnatured.] In a peevish, froward manner.

ILLNATUREDNESS. n. f. [from illnatured.] Want of a kindly disposition.

ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.]

1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sanderfon so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say, he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Walton.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason.

Reason cannot dispute and make inference so utterly illogical. Decay of Piety.

ILLOGICALLY. adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

To ILLUDE. v. a. [illudo, Lat.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him
And falsed off its blow, t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere,
While its circumference, scornful to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Prior.

To ILLUME. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When yon same star, that's westward from the pole,
Had made his course, t' illumine that part of heav'n,
Where now it burns. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow,
Illum'd with flued gold, his near approach Betokens. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLUMINE. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

To confirm his words, out flew
Millions of flaming swords, drawn from the thighs
Of mighty cherubins: the sudden blaze Far round illum'd hell. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What in me is dark,
Illumine! what is low, raise and support! Milton.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line;
O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

To ILLUMINATE. v. a. [illuminer, Fr. luminer, Latin.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light,
T' illumine my dim and dulled eye. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Wotton.

He made the stars,
And set them in the firmament of heav'n,
T' illumine the earth and rule the night. Milton.

Reason our guide, what can the more reply
Than that the sun illuminates the sky;
Than that night rises from his absent ray,
And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandy's Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Warton.

ILLUMINATION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illuminatio, French, from illuminer.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illlightened, and an illumination created. Kaleigh's History.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd.
And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryd. Pers.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work. Felton on the Clapham.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge or grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses. Bacon.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration. Cal.

can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace.

ILLUMINATIVE, adj. [illuminatīf, Fr. from illuminare.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air.

ILLUMINATOR, n. f. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.
2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius giveth to his work.

ILLUSION, n. f. [illusio, Lat. illusio, French.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, distill'd by magick flights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shaksp. Macb.
There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion.

Bacon's Henry VII.

So oft they fell

Into the same illusion: not as man, Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLUSIVE, adj. [from illusis, Lat. Deceiving by false show.

The heathen bards, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms express. Blackm.

While the fond soul
Wraps in gay visions unreal blifs,
Still paints th' illusive forms. Thomson's Spring.

ILLUSORY, adj. [from in and lusorius, Lat. illusio, Fr.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtily, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, confining for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

TO ILLUSTRATE, v. n. [illustrare, Lat. illustrer, French.]

1. To brighten with light.
2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r Giv'n to me to quell their pride. Milton.

Thee the enroll'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Phillips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.
Authors take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown.

ILLUSTRATION, n. f. [illustration, Fr. from illustrare.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Estrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstruse and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLUSTRATIVE, adj. [from illustrare.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to enduce their enthymemes unto the people. Brown.

ILLUSTRATIVELY, adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

ILLUSTRIOUS, adj. [illustris, Lat. illustrer, Fr.] Conspicuous; noble; eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustris titles are derived from things sacred. South.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustris name,
Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryden.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY, adv. [from illustris.] Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdain'd not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustrously manifest his charity. Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustrously are lost. Pope.

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS, n. f. [from illustris.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.

I'm Contracted from I am.

Im is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is in in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use in or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE, n. f. [image, Fr. image, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Matt.
The one is too like an image, and says nothing; and the other too like my lady's oldest son, evermore talking. Shakespeare.

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shaksp.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion. South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.
Manasseh set the carved image in God's house. Chronicles.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.
Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shaksp.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrors of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death. Shakespeare.

He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the soul, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye. Shakespeare's King John.

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears. Dry.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shakespeare.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles. Watts.

TO IMAGE, v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial substances to be imag'd,
Which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future bard shall join
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,

Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

IMAGERY, n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.
Of marble stone was cut
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. Fairy Queen.

When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Zenid.

2. Show; appearance.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secluded from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear? Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the paint and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.
It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholic fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE, adj. [imaginable, Fr. from imaginer.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot esteem. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillot.

IMAGINANT, adj. [imaginant, Fr.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY, adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imaginer.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,
Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakespeare.

Expectation whirls me round:
Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,
That it enchants my sense. Shaksp. Troil. and Cress.

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Addison's Cato.

IMAGINATION, n. f. [imaginatio, Lat. imaginatio, Fr. from imaginer.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past;
and of things present, or as if they were present:
for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glanville.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's soft figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.
Sometimes despair darkens all her imagination;
sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories. As.

An outward honour for an inward toil ;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be fever'd from my griefs ;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp. King Lear.
His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance ; scheme.
Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lam. iii. 60.

4. An unfold or fanciful opinion.
We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless ; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginativ, Fr. from imagi- ner.] Fantastick ; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, Fr. imaginer,
Latin.]

1. To fancy ; to paint in the mind.
Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed.

Shakespeare.

Present fears
Are less than horrible imaginings. Shaksp. Macbeth.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imag- ined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition ? Locke.

2. To scheme ; to contrive.
They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psal. xxi. 11.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up ; and still he did it, by first telling the imaginer, and after bidding the actor think.

Bacon's Natural History.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecit, Lat. imbecill, Fr.]
Weak ; feeble ; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embeszele.] To weaken a stock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbecil'd. Taylor.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecitate, Fr.] Weakness ; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility
and imperfection. Hooker.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which,
being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead.

Shakespeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. A. Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned his primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibe, Lat. imbiber, Fr.]
To drink in ; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, forasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes.

Illumin'd wide, Swift.

The dewy-fk ed clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not believe to contain any thing but promises. Hammond.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices
we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench ; to saturate ; to soak. This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissoluble in water ; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphureous steams.
Arbutnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.]
The act of sucking or drinking in.

Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil : the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not ;
and to all macdefaction there is required an imbi- bition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest ; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure : to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which imbit- ter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Addison's Freeb.

Is there any thing that more imbitters the enjoyments of this life than shame ? South.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBODY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter ; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals
An heav'nly form imbody'd, and array'd
With robes of light. Dryd. n.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbody'd souls can bear without lassitude.

Glanville's Scepsis.

3. To bring together into one mass or company ;
to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbody'd yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shak.

Never since created, man
Met such imbody'd force, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry
Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Under their head imbody'd all in one. Milton.

Then Clausus came, who led a num'rous band
Of troops imbody'd, from the Sabine land. Dr. Æn.

4. To inclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbody'd in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marle. Woodw.

To IMBODY. v. n. To unite into one mass ; to coalesce.

The foul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow-to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOIL. v. n. [from boil.] To exesuate ; to effervece ; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not now in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imbolden in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBOLDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence ; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die :
Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shaksp.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imbolden'd me to this unseasoned intrusion. Shaksp. Merry Wives.

I was the more imbolden'd, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way ;
Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryd. Æn.

Their virtues and superior genius imbolden'd them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBOSOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom ; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garments ; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,
By whom in bliss imbosom'd fat the Son. Milton.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by surging columns mark'd. Thom.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nurs'd. Sidn.

Who glad to imbosom his affection vile,
Did all the might, more plainly to appear. F. & J.

To IMBOUND. v. a. [from bound.] To inclose ;
to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was imbound in this beauteous clay. Shak.

To IMBOW. v. a. [from bow.] To arch ; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure,
Imbowed with gold and gorgeous ornament. F. & J.

Imbowed windows be pretty retiring places for conference : they keep both the wind and sun off.

Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high imbow'd roof.

With antick pillar massy proof. Milton.

IMBOWMENT. n. f. [from imbou.] Arch ; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To IMBOWER. v. a. [from bow.] To cover with a bower ; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbowering walks,
In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

To IMBRANGLE. v. a. To intangle. A low
word.

With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets ;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they stir, the more they're intangled. Hudb.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbricex, Latin.] Indentured with concavities ; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [imbricex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBROWN. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown ; to darken : to obscure ; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unpierc'd shade Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton's Par. Lost.

The foot grows black that was with dirt im- brown'd.

And in thy pocket glingling halfpence found. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown'd the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo ! Henly stands.
Pope.

To IMBUE. v. a. [from in and blue.]

1. To steep ; to soak ; to wet much or long.

This seems indifferently written with in or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embued,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd. Spenser.

There

There streams a spring of blood to fast

From those deep wounds, as all embred the face
Of that accursed catiff. Daniel's Civil War.

The merciless Turks, embred with the Christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Knolles's History.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings imbred.
Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embred their hands in Cato's blood.
Addison.

Lo! these hands in murder are embred,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

These, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar descry'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, she draws,
And in their hearts embred her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Ægyptus' veins imbred;
The murderer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chafes rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbred his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.
Some bathed kisses, and did oft embred
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. F. &.

To IMBRED. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbred. Milton.

To IMBRED. v. n. To sink down to brutality.
The foul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbred, 'till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBUE. v. a. [imbue, Latin.] This word, which seems wanted in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest. Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a fairer passage, than among those that are deeply imbued with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly im- bued with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbued and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBUE. v. a. [lowse, French.] To stock with money. This should be embued, from em- bourser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilis, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multifariousness of this imita- bility, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable, Fr.]
1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh's Hist. World.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imito, Lat. imito, Fr.]
1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Despise wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.
I would carefs some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryd. Æn.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.
IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation,
French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.
2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick or foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the groundwork. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]
1. Inclined to copy; as, Man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance; as, Painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.
This temple, left in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the first in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [imitator, French.]
One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a servile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dryden.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Latin; imma- culé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure, undefiled.
To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hook.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shak.

The king, whom Catholics count a saint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.
Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,

Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shak.
To IMMACULATE. v. a. [from manacle.] To fetter; to confine.

Thou canst not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immacul'd. Milton.

IMMANE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast; prodigi-ously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellections, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends once, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMANIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.] Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown's Vulg. Err.

IMMANITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.] Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Sh.

IMMARCESCIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.]
Unfading. Dr.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odysse.
To IMMARTIAL. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to im- mask our noted outward garments. Shak's Lear.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterial, Fr. in and mater- ia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual, the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces, where there is nothing but light and immortality; no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon; but all joy, tranquility, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;
So hath she not a body of her own,

But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.
Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us. Dec. of Pitt.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tilberson.

2. Unimportant; without weight; imperinent; without relation. The sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIALITY. n. f. [from immaterial.] Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.] In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia,
Latin.] Distinct from matter; incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be
no trouble to immaterIALIZED spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitu-tude. Glanville's Sophy.

IMMATERIALNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.]
Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.]
Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immateri, whereof they be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Latin.]
1. Not ripe.

2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprise of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate:
Let now your immature dissension cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature,
if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor's Rule of liv. body.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.] Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. } n. f. [from immature.] Un-IMMATUREITY. } ripeness; incompleteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glanville.

IMMEASURABILITY. n. f. [immeabilis, Lat.] Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example;
but it is rather, incapability of affording a passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeasurability of the juices.
Arbutnot.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.] Immense;

I M M

menſe; not to be meaſured; indefinitely extenſive.

Churches reared up to an height immeaſurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their reſtoration than their founders before had given them.

Hooker.

From the ſhore

They view'd the vaſt immeaſurable abyſs, Outrageous as a ſea, dark, waſteful, wild. Milton.
Immeaſurable ſtrength they might behold
In me, of wiſdom nothing more than mean. Milt.

What a glorious ſhow are thoſe beings entertained with, that can ſee ſuch tremendous objects wandering through thoſe immeaſurable depths of ether!

Addiſon's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor veſſels to convey,
Nor oars to cut th' immeaſurable way. Pope's Odyſſ.
IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeaſurable.] Immeaſurably; beyond all meaſure.

The Spaniards immeaſurably bewail their dead.

Spencer.

There ye ſhall be fed, and fill'd

Immeaſurably; all things ſhall be your prey. Milt.
IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.] Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to ſhow any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the eſtabliſhed laws of nature. Chryſe.

Nothing will clear a head poſſeſſed with immechanical notions. Mead.

IMMEDIACY. n. f. [from immediat.] Perſonal
greatneſs; power of acting without dependance.
This is a harſh word, and ſenſe peculiar, I believe, to Shakeſpeare.

He led our pow'rs,

Bore the commiſſion of my place and perſon,
The which immunity may well ſtand up,
And call itſelf your brother. Shakeſpeare's Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [from immediat, French; in and medius, Lat.]

1. Being in ſuch a ſtate with reſpect to ſome-thing elſe as that there is nothing between them;
proximate; with nothing intervening.

Möſes mentions the immediate cauſes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental cauſes, that conſtitution of the heavens. Burnet.

2. Not acting by ſecond cauſes.

It is much to be aſcribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleaſure. Abbot.

3. Inſtant; preſent with regard to time. Prior therefore ſhould not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Muſt not be toſt and turn'd to me in words,
But find ſupply immediate. Shakeſpeare's Timon.

Death denounc'd that day,

Which he preſumes already vain, and void,
Becaufe not yet inflicted, as he fear'd,
By ſome immediate ſtroke. Milton's Paradise Loſt.

But the, howe'er of vict'ry ſure,
Contentſ the wretch too long delay'd;

And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,
Calls cruel ſilence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]

1. Without the intervention of any other cauſe or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himſelf, or mediately by the hands of the biſhop, is that which veſts the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Inſtantly; at the time preſent; without delay.

Her father had commanded her to ſlip
Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton Immediate ly to marry. Shakeſpeare's Merry Wives of Wind.

IMMEDIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]

1. Preſence with regard to time.

2. Exemption from ſecond or intervening cauſes.

IMMEDICABLE. adj. [from immedicabilis, Latin.] Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor leſs than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and feſter, and gangrene

To black mortification. Milton's Agoniſt.
IMMEMORABLE. adj. [from immemorabilis, Latin.]

Not worth remembering.

I M M

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [from immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Paſt time of memory; ſo ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have ſome memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for ſome obtained their force by immemorial uſage or cuſtom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and preſcription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrify, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at firſt practice of it, they themſelves knew to be a cheat.

South.

IMMENSE. adj. [from immens, Fr. immensus, Lat.]
Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodneſs infinite! goodneſs immense!
That all this good of evil ſhall produce! Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, ſo infinite or immense eſſence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing diſtinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we ſpeak of immenſity, and of God as an immense being. Greco.

IMMENSELY. adv. [from immense.] Infinitely;
without meaſure.

We ſhall find that the void ſpace of our ſyſtem is *immense*ly bigger than all its corporeal maſs. Benl.

IMMENSITY. n. f. [from immensus, French.] Unbounded greatneſs; infinity.

By the power we find in ourſelves of repeating, is often as we will, any idea of ſpace, we get the idea of immensity. Locke.

He that will conſider the immensity of this fa-brick, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconfiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other manſions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All theſe illuſtrious worlds,
And millions which the glaſs can ne'er deſcry,
Loſt in the wilds of vaſt immensity,

Are ſuns, are centers. Blaekmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immensurable.]
Impoſſibility to be meaſured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and meſurable, Latin.]
Not to be meaſured.

To IMMERGE. v. a. [from immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [from immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of deſert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now uſed in its ſtead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expreſſions of a paſſion, reaſon and my own immerit tell me it muſt not be for me. Suckling.

To IMMERSE. v. a. [from immergo, Latin.]

1. To put under water.

2. To ſink or cover deep.

He flood

More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They obſerved that they were immers'd in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the ſame manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a ſtate of intellectual depreſſion.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of ſaints, ſhould now have leſs appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring ſtate or kingdom; whether they be ſuch as continue ſtill immers'd in the errors of the church of Rome, or ſuch as are recovered out of them. Addiſon's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourſelves with the bu-ſineſs, the pleaſures, and the amuſements of this world: we give ourſelves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerſe ourſelves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impoſſible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immers'd in the enjoyments of this.

IMMERSE. adj. [from immergo, Latin.] Buried; covered; ſunk deep.

After long enquiry of things immerſe in matter,
I interpoſe ſome object which is immateriate, or leſs materiatic; ſuch as this of ſounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERſION. n. f. [from immergo, Latin; in and French.]

I M M

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the ſurface.

Achilles's mother is ſaid to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immerſion. Addiſon's Guardian.

2. The ſtate of ſinking below the ſurface of a fluid.

3. The ſtate of being overwhelmed or loſt in any reſpect.

Many perſons, who, through the heat of their luſts and paſſions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immerſion in the affairs of life, ſwerve from the rules of their holy faith;
yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Con-fuſed; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Bayle compares the anſwering of an immetho-dical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your fight, he gives you the ſlip, and becomes inviſible. Addiſon.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immethodical.]
Without method; without order.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending danger; immediate or near danger. A word not in uſe.

I do not ſpeak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men

Address their dangers in. Shakeſpeare's Troilus and Creſſida.

IMMINENT. adj. [from imminent, Fr. imminent, Lat.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill ſenſe.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day

You have defended me from imminent death. Shakeſpeare.

Theſe he applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee

Hath begg'd, that I will ſtay at home to-day. Shakeſpeare.

To them preach'd

Conversion and repentance, as to ſouls
In priſon, under judgment imminent. Milton.

Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniencies. Pope.

To IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingre.] To mingle; to mix; to unite.

Some of us, like thee, through ſtormy life
Toil'd, tempeſt-beaten, ere we could attain

This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immiſc charms. Thomſon.

IMMIXTION. n. f. [from immiſco, Latin.]
Diminution; decrease.

Theſe revolutions are exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not Providence continually overſee and ſecure them from all alteration or immixtion. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. f. [from immiſcibilis.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miſcible.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarke.

Samſon, with theſe immiſc, inevitably Pull'd down the ſame deſtruction on himſelf. Milt.

IMMIXABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impoſſible to be mingled.

Fill a glaſs ſphere with ſuch liquors as may be clear, of the ſame colour, and immiſcible. Wilkins.

IMMOBILITY. n. f. [from immobilitas, French, from immobilis, Lat.] Unmoveableneſs; want of motion; reſiſtance to motion.

The courſe of fluids through the vaſcular ſolids muſt in time harden the fibres, and aboliſh many of the canals; from whence drineſs, weakneſs, immobility, and debility of the vital force. Arbut.

IMMODERATE. adj. [from immoderatus, Fr. immoderatus, Lat.] Exceſſive; exceeding the due mean.

One means, very effectual for the preſervation of health, is a quiet and cheerful mind, not affected

The French are the most implacable and the most dangerous enemies of the British nation.

IMPLACABLY. adv. [from implacabilis.]

1. With malice not to be pacified; inexorably.

An order was made for disarming all the papists; upon which, though nothing was after done, yet it kept up the apprehensions in the people of dangers, and disinclined them from the queen, whom they begun every day more impla- cably to hate, and consequently to disoblige.

2. It is once used by Dryden in a kind of mixed sense of a tyrant's love.

I love,

And 'tis below my greatness to disown it:

Love thee implacably, yet hate thee too.

To IMPLANT. v. a. [in and planto, Latin.] To infix; to insert; to place; to engrave; to settle;

to set; to sow. The original meaning of putting a vegetable into the ground to grow is not often used.

In whose chief part your worths implanted be?

See, Father! what first-fruits on earth are sprung.

From thy implanted grace in man!

No need of public sanctions this to bind,

Which Nature has implanted in the mind.

There grew to the outside of the arytenoides

another cartilage, capable of motion by the help of some muscles that were implanted in it.

God having endowed man with faculties of knowing, was no more obliged to implant those innate notions in his mind, than that, having given him reason, hands, and materia's, he should build him bridges.

IMPLANTATION. n. f. [implantation, Fr. from implant.] The act of setting or planting; the act of enfixing or settling.

IMPLAUSIBLE. adj. [in and plausible.] Not specious; not likely to seduce or persuade.

pletion, there may succeed a disruption of the matrix.

IMPLEX. adj. [implexus, Latin.] Intricate;

entangled; complicated: opposed to simple.

Every poem is either simple or implex: it is called simple when there is no change of fortune in it; implex, when the fortune of the chief actor changes from bad to good, or from good to bad.

To IMPLICATE. v. a. [impliquer, Fr. implicare,

Latin.] To entangle; to embarrass; to involve;

to infold.

The ingredients of saltpetre do so mutually im-

PLICATE and hinder each other, that the concrete acts but very languidly.

IMPLICATION. n. f. [implicatio, Lat. implicatio,

French, from implicare.]

1. Involvement; entanglement.

Three principal causes of firmness are the gross-ness, the quiet contact, and the implication of the component parts.

2. Inference not expressed, but tacitly inculcated.

Though civil causes, according to some men,

are of less moment than criminal, yet the doctors are, by implication, of a different opinion.

IMPLICIT. adj. [implicitus, Fr. implicitus, Lat.]

1. Entangled; infolded; complicated. This sense is rare.

In his woolly fleece

I cling implicit.

The humble shrub,

And bush with frizz'd hair implicit.

2. Inferred: tacitly comprised; not expressed.

In the first establishments of speech there was an implicit compact, founded upon common consent, that such and such words should be signs, whereby they would express their thoughts one to another.

Our express requests are not granted, but the implicit desires of our hearts are fulfilled.

3. Resting upon another; connected with another over which that which is connected to it has no power; trusting without reserve or examination. Thus, by implicit credulity, I may believe a letter yet not opened, when I am confident of the writer's veracity.

There be false peaces or unities, when the peace is grounded but upon an implicit ignorance; for all colours will agree in the dark.

No longer by implicit faith we err,

Whilst every man's his own interpreter.

IMPLICITLY. adv. [from implicit.]

1. By inference comprised, though not expressed.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth im-

PLICITLY deny his existence: he may acknowledge what he will with his mouth, but in his heart he hath said there is no God.

2. By connexion with something else; dependently; with unreserved confidence or obedience.

My blushing muse with conscious fear retires;

And whom they like, implicitly admires.

Learn not to dispute the methods of his providence;

dence; but humbly and implicitly to acquiesce in and adore them. Atterbury.

We implicitly follow in the track in which they lead us, and comfort ourselves with this poor reflection, that we shall fare as well as those that go before us. Rogers.

To IMPLORE. v. a. [implorare, French; imploro, Latin.]

3. Hostile impression.

Like two great rocks against the raging tide, Unmov'd the two united chiefs abide,

Sustain th' impulse, and receive the war. Prior.

IMPULSION, n. f. [impulsio, Fr. impulsus, Lat.]

1. The agency of body in motion upon body.

The motion in the minute parts of any solid body passeth without sound; for that sound that is heard sometimes is produced only by the breaking of the air, and not by the impulsion of the air. Bacon.

To the impulsion there is requisite the force of the body that moveth, and the resistance of the body that is moved; and if the body be too great, it yieldeth too little; and if it be too small, it resisteth too little. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Influence operating upon the mind.

But thou didst plead

Divine impulsion, prompting how thou might'st Find some occasion to infect our foes. Milton.

IMPULSIVE, adj. [impulsif, Fr. from impulse.] Having the power of impulse; moving; impellent.

Nature and duty bind him to obedience; But those being placed in a lower sphere,

His fierce ambition, like the highest mover, Has hurried with a strong impulsive motion Against their proper course. Denham's Sobhy.

What is the fountain or impulsive cause of this prevention of sin? It is perfectly free grace. South.

Poor men! poor papers! we and they Do some impulsive force obey, And are but play'd with, do not play. Prior.

IMPUNITY, n. f. [impunitas, Fr. impunitas, Lat.] Freedom from punishment; exemption from punishment.

In the condition of subjects they will gladly continue, as long as they be protected and justly governed, without oppression on the one side, or impunity on the other. Davies.

A general impunity would confirm them; for the vulgar will never believe, that there is a crime where they see no penalty. Addis.

Men, potent in the commonwealth, will employ their illgotten influence towards procuring impunity, or extorting undue favours for themselves or dependents. Atterbury.

IMPURE, adj. [impur, Fr. impurus, Lat.]

Neither do I reflect upon the memory of his late majesty, whom I entirely acquit of any imputation upon this matter.
Swift.

4. Hint; slight notice.

Antonio is a good man.

—Have you heard any imputation to the contrary?
—No, no; my meaning is to have you understand me that he is sufficient.
Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

IMPURATIVE. adj. [from impure.] That which may impute.

To IMPUTE. v. a. [impute, Fr. impute, Lat.]

1. To charge upon; to attribute; generally ill; sometimes good.

It was imputed to him for righteousness. Rom.

Men in their innovations should follow the example of time, which innovateth but quietly, and by degrees scarce to be perceived; for otherwise whatsoever is new and unlooked for, ever mends some, and impairs others; and he that is helper takes it for a fortune, and thanks the time; and he that is hurt for a wrong, imputeth it to the author.
Bacon's Essays.

I made it by your persuasion, to satisfy those who imputed it to folly.
Temple.

Impute your dangers to our ignorance.
Dryden.

IN. prep. [in, Lat.]

1. Noting the place where any thing is present; not without.

In school of love are all things taught we see;
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise.
Fairfax.

Is this place here not sufficient strong

To guard us in?
Daniel's Civil War.

2. Noting the state or thing present at any time.

The other is only by error and misconceit named the ordinance of Jesus Christ: no one proof is yet brought forth, whereby it may clearly appear to be so in very deed.
Hooker.

Like one of two contending in a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes.
Shaksp.peare.

Sir Edmund Courtney, and the haughty prelate, With many more confederates, are in arms. Shak.

Danger before, and in, and after the act,
You needs must grant is great. Daniel's Civil War.

However it be in knowledge, I may truly say it is of no use at all in probabilities; for the assent there, being to be determined by preponderancy, after a due weighing of all the proofs on both sides, nothing is so unfit to assist the mind in that, as syllogism.
Locke.

God hath made our eternal and temporal interests, in most cases, very consistent. Smithridge's Ser.

None was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused.
Dunclad.

3. Noting the time.

When we would consider eternity a parte ante, what do we but, beginning from ourselves and the present time we are in, repeat in our minds the ideas of years or ages past?
Locke.

Lord Clifford vows to fight in thy defence. Shaksp.

10. In that. Because.

Some things they do in that they are men; in that they are wise men, and christian men, some things; some things in that they are men misled, and blinded with error.
Hooker.

He cannot brook such disgrace well, as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search.
Shaksp.peare.

11. In as much. Since; Seeing that.

Those things are done voluntarily by us, which other creatures do naturally, in as much as we might stay our doing of them if we would.
Hooker.

IN. adv.

1. Within some place; not out.

How infamous is the false, fraudulent, and unconscionable person; especially if he be arrived at that consummate and robust degree of falsehood as to play in and out, and show tricks with oaths, the sacred bonds which the conscience of a man can be bound with.
South.

I fear me you'll be in 'till then. Shaksp.peare.

2. Engaged to any affair.

We know the worst can come: 'tis thought upon; We cannot shift being in, we must go on. Daniel.

These pragmatists flies value themselves for being in at every thing, and are found at last to be just good for nothing.
L'Estrange.

3. Placed in some state.

Poor rogues talk of court news,
Who loses and who wins; who's in, who's out. Sh.

Must never patriot then declaim at gin,
Unless good man he has been fairly in? Pope.

4. Noting immediate entrance.

Go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner. Shaksp.

He's too big to go in there: what shall I do?
—Let me see't; I'll in, I'll in: follow your friend's advice, I'll in. Shaksp.peare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. Into any place.

Next fill the hole with its own earth again,
And trample with thy feet, and tread it in. Dryden.

INARABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Dict.

To INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother-tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins's Math. Magick.

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence. In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact. Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence, from the object of the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidence of his happiness. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [Incident, Lat.] Accident; hap; casualty.

What incidence thou do'st guess of harm declare, Is creeping towards me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incident, Lat.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; falling in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rare incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which makes another proposition: as, every man who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Constancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, Fr. from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryd. Dufres.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual; happening by chance; not intended; not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those incidental discourses which we have wandered into. Mit.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incidental business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Rogers.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incidental.] Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and incidentally mentioned in Scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or incidentally of colours. Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally: by the bye; by the way.

It was incidentally moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attainted; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

To INCINERATE. v. a. [in and cinere, Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurates, then maketh fragile: lastly, it doth incinerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, maketh it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and incinerate. Bacon.

These dregs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Hart. on Conf.

INCINERATION. n. f. [incineration, Fr. from incinerare.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the first salt of urine, brought by depuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very different from the caustick lixiviate taste of other salts made by incineration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSCRIPTION. n. f. [in and circumscription.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCISED. adj. [inciser, Fr. incisas, Lat.] Cut; made by cutting: as, an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wifm. Surg.

INCISION.

INCISION. n. f. [incision, Fr. inciso, Latin.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a chirurgion.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterfion is a scouring off, or incision of viscous humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen.

INCISIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Latin.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors.

INCISOR. n. f. [incisor, Latin.] Cutter; tooth in the forepart of the mouth.

INCISORY. adj. [incisive, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCISURE. n. f. [incisura, Lat.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.

TO INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to?

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

Hartlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.

INCIVIL. adj. [incivil, Fr.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, Fr. in and civility.] 1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural. Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities.

INCLEMENT. n. f. [inclement, Fr. inclementia, Lat.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heaven's inclement some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clement, Lat.] Unmerciful; un pitying; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vast supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Lat.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to. People are not always inclinable to the best.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine was the same way inclinable.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.

Desire,
Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a crust naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last; but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclinatio, Latin, Fr. inclination, Lat.]

1. Tendency towards any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclination of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.

2. Natural aptness.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet, in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law?

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting.

5. Disposition of mind.

Bid him
Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the East or West.

7. [In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poured off from some faces or sediment by only stooping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatory virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatory.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from North and South.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatoryly, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, towards the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity.

TO INCLINE. v. n. [inclin, Lat. inclin, Fr.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend towards any part: with to or towards.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

—He seems indifferent;
Or rather swaying more upon our part.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

TO INCLINE. v. a.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight, inclines
Our eye-lids.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the baron fate inclines the field.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

2. To turn towards any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law.

Ye have not inclined your ear unto me.

But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my body I incline,
As to some being of superior kind.

TO INCLIP. v. a. [in and clip.] To grasp; to inclose; to surround.

Whate'er the ocean pales, or sky inclips,
Is thine, if thou wilt ha't.

TO INCLOISTER. v. a. [in and cloister.] To shut up in a cloister.

TO INCLOUD. v. a. [in and cloud.] To darken; to obscure.

In their thick breaths,
Rank of gross diet, shall we be included,
And forc'd to drink their vapour.

TO INCLODE. v. a. [inclo, Lat.]

1. To inclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.

2. To comprize; to comprehend.

This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intire leaf.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, Fr.]

1. Inclosing, encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to fear me to the brain!

2. Comprised in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where ev'ry virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.] The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods or growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inchoately; and is differenced partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.] Incapable of concretion.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.] The quality of not existing together; non-association of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or incoexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog, Depend upon it, he'll remain inco. Addison.

INCOGNITANCY. n. f. [incognitancy, Lat.] Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to succeeders, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incognitancy presumption. Boyle.

Next to the stupid and mealy vegetable state of incognitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Decay of Piety.

INCOGNITIVE. adj. [in and cognitive.] Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our beads, and inco, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cognitive and incognitive beings. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Lat.] In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago

Since gods came down inco. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. n. f. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. n. f. [in and coherence.]

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

2. Want of connection; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherence of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherences in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handfomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as puerous as those of marble or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.] Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Eurylochus is the imitation of a person confounded with fears, speaking irrationally, and incoherently. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

INCOMMITTY. n. f. [incomitatus, Lat.] Safety; security. A word very little in use.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incomitancy and welfare of a country. Howel.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the Amianthus for its incombustibility.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustible, Fr. in and combustible.] Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustible.] The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.] Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repineest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his incomes, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord. Dryden's Geor.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large incomes annexed to some few of her preferments, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.] The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French, from in, can, and mensurable, Latin.] Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, can, and mensura, Lat.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Holder on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be said to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

TO INCOMMUNDATE. } v. a. [incommodo, Lat.
TO INCOMMUNDE. } [incommodo, Fr.] To be inconvenient to; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A gnat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommode ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommode the inhabitants, yet the agent, whereby both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.] Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodius to a few. Hooker.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.] Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.] Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMODY. n. f. [incommodit, French, incommoditas, Lat.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law, which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spencer's State of Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or stone, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound itself profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might to cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smok. Watson's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.] The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable, Fr. in and communicable.]

1. Not impartible; not to be made the common right, property, or quality of more than one. They cannot ask more than I can give, may I but reserve to myself the incommunicable jewel of my conscience. King Charles.

Light without darkness is the incommunicable claim of him that dwells in light accessible. Glan.

It was agreed on both sides, that there was one supreme excellency, which was incommunicable to any creature. Stillingfleet.

2. Not to be expressed; not to be told.

Neither did he treat them with these peculiarities of favour in the extraordinary discoveries of the gospel only, but also of those incommunicable revelations of the divine love, in reference to their own personal interest in it. South.

INCOMMUNICABLY. adv. [from incommunicable.] In a manner not to be imparted or communicated.

To annihilate is both in reason, and by the consent of divines, as incommunicably the effect of a power divine, and above nature, as is creation itself. Hakewill on Providence.

INCOMMUNICATING. adj. [in and communicating.] Having no intercourse with each other.

The judgments and administrations of common justice are preserved from that confusion that would ensue, if the administration was by several incommunicating hands, or by provincial establishments. Hale's Common Law.

INCOMPACT. } adj. [in and compact.] Not

INCOMPACTED. } joined; not cohering.

Salt, say they, is the basis of solidity and permanency in compound bodies, without which the other four elements might be variously blended, but would remain incompact. Boyle.

INCOMPARABLE. adj. [incomparable, Fr. in and comparable.] Excellent above compare; excellent beyond all competition.

My heart would not suffer me to omit any occasion, whereby I might make the incomparable Pamela see how much extraordinary devotion I bore to her service. Stacy.

A most incomparable man, breath'd as it were

To an unfirable and continue goodness. Shakspeare.

Her words do show her wit incomparable. Shakspeare.

Now this mask

Was cried incomparable, and th' ensuing night

Made it a fool and beggar. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

If I could leave this argument of your incomparable beauty, I might turn to one which would equally oppress me with its greatness. Dryden.

INCOMPARABLY. adv. [from incomparable.]

1. Beyond comparison; without competition.

A founder it had, whom I think incomparably the wisest man that over the French church did enjoy, since the hour it enjoyed him. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

2. Excellency; to the highest degree. A low phrase.

There are the heads of Antoninus Pius, the Faustinas, and Marous Aurelius, all incomparably well cut. Addison on Italy.

INCOMPASSIONATE. adj. [in and compassionate.] Void of pity; void of tenderness.

INCOMPATIBILITY. n. f. [properly incompatibility, in and compato, Lat.] Inconsistency of one thing with another.

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Watson.

The reason of the stress rests not upon the incompatibility

competibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intension or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. [incompatible, French: rather incompatible, as it is sometimes written; in and competo, Lat.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed by with.

Fortune and love have ever been incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had so much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Suckling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompatibly, from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shadow of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.] Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionable. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disfigure their issues, upon false and incompetent pretences, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove, the grosser faults of others.

Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unfitly; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and maimed without us. Hooker.

In incomplete ideas we are apt to impose on ourselves, and wrangle with others, especially where they have particular and familiar names. Locke.

INCOMPLETENESS. n. f. [from incomplete.] Imperfection; unfinished state.

The incompleteness of our seraphick lover's happiness, in his fruitions, proceeds not from their want of satisfactoriness, but of an intire possession. Boyle.

INCOMPLIANCE. n. f. [in and compliance.] 1. Untractableness; impracticableness; contradictory temper.

Self-conceit produces peevishness and incompliance of humour in things lawful and indifferent. Tillotson.

2. Refusal of compliance.

Consider the vast disproportion between the worst inconveniences that can attend our incom- pliance with men, and the eternal displeasure of an offended God. Rogers.

INCOMPOSED. adj. [in and composed.] Disturbed; discomposed; disordered. Not much used. Somewhat incomposed they are in their trimming, and extraordinary tender of their young ones. Howell.

IMPOSSIBILITY. n. f. [from impossible.] Quality of being not possible but by the negation or destruction of something: inconsistency with something.

The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same fitnesses in any modification. More.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally impossible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the impossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude, yet that impossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that ariseth from individuals already actually distinguished. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

IMPOSSIBLE. adj. [im, con, and possible.] Not possible together; not possible but by the negation of something else.

IMPREHENSIBILITY. n. f. [imprehen- sibility, French, from imprehen- sible.] Unconceivableness; superiority to human understanding.

IMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [imprehen- sible, Fr. in and comprehen- sible.]

1. Not to be conceived; not to be fully understood.

His precepts tend to the improving and perfecting the most valuable part of us, and annexing imprehen- sible rewards as an eternal weight of glory. Hammond.

Stars that seem to roll

Spaces imprehen- sible.

One thing more is imprehen- sible in this matter. Milton.

The laws of vegetation and propagation are the arbitrary pleasure of God, and may vary in manners imprehen- sible to our imaginations. Locke.

2. Not to be contained. Not now used.

Preference every where is the sequel of an infinite and imprehen- sible substance; for what can be every where but that which can no where be comprehended? Bentley.

IMPREHENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from imprehen- sible.] Unconceivableness.

I might argue from God's imprehen- *sible*ness: if we could believe nothing but what we have ideas of, it would be impossible for us to believe God is imprehen- sible. Hooker.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from imprehen- sible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is imprehen- sibly infinite. Watts.

IMPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from imprehen- sible.] In a manner not to be conceived.

We cannot but be assured that the God, of whom and from whom are all things, is imprehen- sibly infinite. Locke.

IMPRESSIBLE. adj. [impre- ssible, Fr. in and compre- ssible.] Not capable of being compressed into less space.

Hardness is the reason why water is impre- ssible, when the air lodged in it is exhausted. Gheyn.

IMCOMPRESSIBILITY. n. f. [from impre- ssible.] Incapacity to be squeezed into less room.

INCONCURRING. adj. [in and concur.] Not concurring.

They derive effects not only from concurring causes, but things devoid of all efficacy. Brown.

INCONCEALABLE. adj. [in and conceal.] Not to be hid; not to be kept secret.

The inconcealable imperfections of ourselves will hourly prompt us to our corruption, and loudly tell us we are sons of earth. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONCEIVABLE. adj. [inconceivable, Fr. in and conceivable.] Unconceivable; not to be conceived by the mind.

Such are Christ's promises, divine inconceivable promises; a bliss to be enjoyed to all eternity, and that by way of return for a weak obedience of some few years. Hammond.

It is inconceivable to me, that a spiritual substance should represent an extended figure. Locke.

How two others can be diffused through all space, one of which acts upon the other, and by consequence is reacted upon, without retarding, shattering, dispersing, and confounding one another's motions, is inconceivable. Newton's Opticks.

INCONCEIVABLY. adv. [from inconceivable.] In a manner beyond comprehension; to a degree beyond human comprehension.

Does that man take a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of those lesser troubles, to secure himself from a condition inconceivably more miserable? South.

INCONCEPTIBLE. adj. [in and conceptible; conceptus, Lat.] Not to be conceived; inconceivable; inconceivable. A word not used.

It is inconceivable how any such man, that hath stood the shock of an eternal duration without corruption, should after be corrupted. Hale's Orig.

INCONCLUSIVE. adj. [in and concludens, Lat.] Inferring no consequence.

The depositions of witnesses themselves, as being false, various, contrariant, single inconclusive.

INCONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INCONCLUSIVE. adj. [in and conclusive.] Not enforcing any determination of the mind; not exhibiting cogent evidence.

INCONCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inconclusive.] Without any such evidence as determines the understanding.

INCONCLUSIVENESS. n. f. [from inconclusive.] Want of rational cogency.

A man, unskilful in syllogism, at first hearing, could perceive the weakness and inconclusiveness of a long, artificial, and plausible discourse, where-with some others, better skilled in syllogism, have been misled. Locke.

INCONCOCT. } adj. [in and concoct.] Unripe; INCONCOCTED. } ened; immature; not fully digested.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon.

I understand, remember, and reason better in my riper years, than when I was a child, and had my organical parts less digested and inconcocted.

INCONCOCTION. n. f. [from inconcoct.] The state of being indigested; unripeness; immaturity.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called incoction, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

While the body, to be converted and altered, is too strong for the efficient that should convert it, it is all that while crude and inconcoct; and the process is to be called crudity and inconcoction. Bacon.

INCONDITE. adj. [inconditus, Lat.] Irregular; rude; unpolished.

Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhyme with fuiting notes,
And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

INCONDITIONAL. adj. [in and conditional.] Without exception; without limitation; without stipulation.

From that which is but true in a qualified sense, an inconditional and absolute verity is inferred. Brown.

INCONDITIONATE. adj. [in and condition.] Not limited; not restrained by any conditions; absolute.

They ascribe to God, in relation to every man, an eternal, unchangeable, and inconditionate decree of election or reprobation. Boyle.

INCONFORMITY. n. f. [in and conformity.] Incompliance with the practice of others.

We have thought their opinion to be, that utter inconformity with the church of Rome was not an extremity whereunto we should be drawn for a time, but the very mediocrity itself, wherein they meant we should ever continue. Hooker.

INCONFUSION. n. f. [in and confusion.] Distinctness. Not used.

The cause of the confusion in sounds, and the inconfusion in species visible, is, for that the sight worketh in right lines, and so there can be no coincidence in the eye; but sounds that move in oblique and accurate lines, must needs encounter and disturb the one or the other. Bacon.

INCONGRUENCE. n. f. [in and congruence.] Unsuitableness; want of adaption.

Humidity is but relative, and depends upon the congruity or incongruence of the component particles of the liquor to the pores of the bodies it touches. Boyle.

INCONGRUITY. n. f. [incongruité, Fr. from incongruus.] 1. Unsuitableness of one thing to another.

The fathers make use of this acknowledgement of the incongruity of images to the Deity, from thence to prove the incongruity of the worship of them. Stillington.

2. Inconsistency; inconsequence; absurdity; impropriety.

To avoid absurdities and incongruities, is the same law established for both arts: the painter is not to paint a cloud at the bottom of a picture, nor the poet to place what is proper to the end in the beginning of a poem. Dryden.

3. Disagreement of parts; want of symmetry.

She, whom after what form so'er we see,
Is discord and rude incongruity;
She, she is dead, she's dead. Donne.

INCONGRUOUS. adj. [incongru, Fr. in and congruus.] 1. Unsuitable; not fitting.

Wiser heathens condemned the worship of God as incongruous to a divine nature, and a disparagement to the deity. Stillington.

2. Inconsistent; absurd.

INCONGRUOUSLY. adv. [from incongruous.] Improperly; unsuitably.

INCONNEXEDLY. adv. [in and connex.] Without any connexion or dependence. Little used.

Others ascribed hereto, as a cause, what perhaps but casually or inconnexedly succeeds. Brown's V. E.

INCONSCIONABLE. adj. [in and conscionable.] Void of the sense of good and evil; without influence of conscience. Not used.

So inconscionable are these common people, and so little feeling have they of God, or their own souls good. Spenser.

INCONSEQUENCE. n. f. [inconsequence, Fr. inconsequentia, Lat.] Inconclusiveness; want of just inference.

This he bestows the name of many fallacies upon; and runs on with shewing the inconsequence of it, as though he did in earnest believe it were an impertinent answer. Stillington.

INCONSEQUENT. adj. [in and consequent, Lat.] Without just conclusion; without regular inference.

The ground he assumes is unsound, and his illation from thence deduced inconsequent. Hakewill.

Men rest not in false apprehensions without absurd and inconsequent deductions from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erecting conclusions no way inferrible from their premises. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONSIDERABLE. adj. [in and considerable.] Unworthy of notice; unimportant; mean; of little value.

I am an inconsiderable fellow, and know nothing. Denham.

The most inconsiderable of creatures may at some time or other come to revenge itself upon the greatest. B. E. Strange.

Casting my eyes upon the ants, continually taken up with a thousand cares, very inconsiderable with respect to us, but of the greatest importance for them, they appeared to me worthy of my curiosity. Addison.

May not planets and comets perform their motions more freely, and with less resistance, in this ethereal medium than in any fluid, which fills all space adequately without leaving any pores, and by consequence is much denser than quicksilver or gold? And may not its resistance be so small as to be inconsiderable? Newton's Opticks.

If we were under any real fear of the papists, it would be hard to think us so stupid not to be equally apprehensive with others, since we are likely to be the greatest sufferers; but we look upon them to be altogether as inconsiderable as the women and children. Swift.

Let no sin appear small or inconsiderable by which an almighty God is offended, and eternal salvation endangered. Rogers.

INCONSIDERABLENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderable.] Small importance.

To those who are thoroughly convinced of the inconsiderableness of this short dying life, in comparison of that eternal state which remains for us in another life, the consideration of a future happiness is the most powerful motive. Tillotson.

From the consideration of our own smallness and inconsiderableness, in respect of the greatness and splendor of heavenly bodies, let us with the holy psalmist raise up our hearts. Ray on the Crea.

INCONSIDERATE. adj. [inconsider, Fr. inconsideratus, Lat.] 1. Careless; thoughtless; negligent; inattentive; inadvertent: used both of men and things.

When thy inconsiderate hand
Flings ope this casement with my trembling name,
Then think this name alive, and that thou thus
In it offend'st my genius. Donne.

If you lament it,
That which now looks like justice, will be thought
An inconsiderate rashness. Denham's Sophy.

It is a very unhappy token of our corruption, that there should be any so inconsiderate among us as to sacrifice morality to politicks. Addison's Free.

2. Wanting due regard; with of before the subject.

He who laid down his life for the redemption of the transgressions, which were under the first Testament, cannot be so inconsiderate of our frailties. Decay of Picty.

INCONSIDERATELY. adv. [from inconsiderate.] Negligently; thoughtlessly; inattentively.

The king, transported with just wrath, inconsiderately fighting and precipitating the charge, before his whole numbers came up, was slain in the pursuit. Bacon.

Joseph was delighted with Marianne's conversation, and endeavoured with all his art to set out the excess of Herod's passion for her; but when he still found her cold and incredulous, he inconsiderately told her the private orders he left behind. Addison's Spectator.

INCONSIDERATENESS. n. f. [from inconsiderate.] Carelessness; thoughtlessness; negligence; want of thought; inadvertence; inattention.

If men do know and believe that there is such a being as God, not to demean ourselves towards him as becomes our relation to him, is great stupidity, and inconsiderateness. Tillotson.

INCONSIDERATION. n. f. [inconsideration, Fr. inconsideration.] Want of thought; inattention; inadvertence.

S. Gregory reckons uncleanness to be the parent of blindness of mind, inconsideration, precipitancy or giddiness in actions, and self-love. Taylor.

INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.] Not consistent; incompatible with. Not used.

The persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind. Dryden's Dufres.

INCONSISTENCE. } n. f. [from inconsistent.]
INCONSISTENCY. }

1. Such opposition as that one proposition infers the negation of the other; such contrariety that both cannot be together.

There is a perfect inconsistency between that which is of debt, and that which is of free gift. South.

2. Absurdity in argument or narration; argument or narrative, where one part destroys the other; self-contradiction.

3. Incongruity.

Mutability of temper, and inconsistency with ourselves, is the greatest weakness of human nature. Addison.

If a man would register all his opinions upon love, politicks, religion and learning, what a bundle of inconsistencies and contradictions would appear at last! Swift.

4. Unsteadiness; changeableness.

INCONSISTENT. adj. [in and consistent.] 1. Incompatible; not suitable; incongruous: followed by with.

Finding no kind of compliance, but sharp protestations against the demands, as inconsistent with conscience, justice, or religion, the conference broke off. Clarendon.

Compositions of this nature, when thus restrained, shew that wisdom and virtue are far from being inconsistent with politeness and good humour. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Contrary, so as that one infers the negation or destruction of the other.

The idea of an infinite space or duration is very obscure and confused, because it is made up of two parts very different, if not inconsistent. Locke.

3. Absurd; having parts of which one destroys the other.

INCONSISTENTLY. adv. [from inconsistent.] Absurdly; incongruously; with self-contradiction.

INCONSOLABLE. adj. [inconsolable, Fr. in and console.] Not to be comforted; sorrowful beyond susceptibility of comfort.

Her women will represent to me that she is inconsolable, by reason of my unkindness. Addison.

They take pleasure in an obstinate grief, in rendering themselves inconsolable. Fiddes's Sermons.

INCONSONANCY. n. f. [in and consonancy.] Disagreement with itself.

INCONSPICUOUS. adj. [in and conspicuous.] Indiscernible; not perceptible by the sight.

When an excellent experimenter had taken pains in accurately filling up a tube of mercury, we found that yet there remained store of inconspicuous bubbles. Boyle.

INCONSTANCY. n. f. [inconstancia, Lat. inconstance, Fr. from inconstant.] 1. Unsteadiness; want of steady adherence; mutability of temper or affection.

I have suffered more for their fakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man is able to bear. Shakespeare.

Be made the mark
For all the people's hate, the prince's curses,
And the son's rage, or the old king's inconstancy. Denham.

Irresolution on the schemes of life which offer to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

2. Diversity; dissimilitude.

As much inconstancy and confusion is there in their mixtures or combinations; for it is rare to find any of them pure and unmixed. Woodward.

INCONSTANT. adj. [inconstant, Fr. inconstant, Lat.] 1. Not firm in resolution; not steady in affection; various of inclination; wanting perseverance: of persons.

He is so naturally inconstant, that I marvel his soul finds not some way to kill his body. Sidney.

2. Changeable; mutable; variable: of things.

O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakespeare.

INCONSUMABLE. adj. [in and consume.] Not to be wasted.

By art were weaved napkins, shirts, and coats, inconsumable by fire, and wherein they burnt the bodies of kings. Brown.

INCONSUMPTIBLE. adj. [in and consumptus, Lat.] Not to be spent; not to be brought to an end; not to be destroyed by fire. This seems a more elegant word than inconsumable.

Before I give any answer to this objection of pretended inconsumptible lights, I would gladly see the effect undoubtedly proved. Digby on Rhetoric.

INCONTESTABLE. adj. [incontestable, Fr. in and contest.] Not to be disputed; not admitting debate; uncontrovertible.

Our own being furnishes us with an evident and incontestable proof of a Deity; and I believe nobody can avoid the cogency of it, who will carefully attend to it. Locke.

INCONTINUITY. adv. [from incontinuum.] Indisputably; uncontrovertibly.

INCONTIGUOUS. adj. [in and contiguous.] Not touching each other; not joined together.

They seemed part of small bracelets, consisting of equally little incontiguous beads. Boyle.

INCON-

INCONTINENCE. } n. f. [incontinentia, Latin, INCONTINENCY. } in and continence.] Inability to restrain the appetites; unchastity.

The cognizance of her incontinency
Is this: she hath bought the name of whore thus dearly. Shakespeare.

But beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree,
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon watch with unenchanted eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence, Milton.

This is my defence;
I pleas'd myself, I shunn'd incontinence,
And, urg'd by strong desires, indulg'd my sense. Dryden.

The words sine veste Dianam agree better with Livia, who had the fame of chastity, than with either of the Julias, who were both noted of in- continency. Dryden.

INCONTINENT. adj. [incontinent, Lat. is and continent.]

1. Unchaste; indulging unlawful pleasure.
In these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage, which they will climb incontinent, or else be incontinent before marriage. Shakespeare.
Men shall be lovers of their own selves, false accusers, incontinent, fierce. 2 Tim. iii. 3.
2. Shunning delay; immediate. This is a meaning now obsolete.

They ran towards the far rebounded noise,
To weet what wight so loudly did lament:
Unto the place they came incontinent. Fairy Queen.
Come, mourn with me for what I do lament,
And put on fullen black incontinent. Shakespeare.
He says he will return incontinent. Shakespeare.
INCONTINENTLY. adv. [from incontinent.]

1. Unchastely; without restraint of the appetites.
2. Immediately; at once. An obsolete sense. Spenser.

The cause of this war is no other than that we will not incontinently submit ourselves to our neighbours. Hayward.

Incontinently I left Madrid, and have been dogged and way laid through several nations. Arbutnot.
INCONTROVERTIBLE. adj. [in and controverti- ble.] Indisputable; not to be disputed.

INCONTROVERTIBLY. adv. [from incontroversi- ble.] To a degree beyond controversy or dispute.

The Hebrew is incontroversibly the primitive and surest text to rely upon; and to preserve the same uncorrupt, there hath been the highest caution humanity could invent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INCONVENIENCE. } n. f. [inconvenient, Fr.]
INCONVENIENCY. }

1. Unfitness; inexpedience.
They plead against the inconvenience, not the unlawfulness of popish apparel; and against the in- conveniency, not the unlawfulness of ceremonies in burial. Hooker.

2. Disadvantage; cause of uneasiness; difficulty.
There is a place upon the top of Mount Athos above all clouds of rain, or other inconvenience. Ral.

Man is liable to a great many inconveniences every moment, and is continually unsecure even of life itself. Tillotson.

The inconvenience of old age makes him incapable of corporal pleasures. Dryden.

Would not quickness of sensation be an inconve- nience to an animal, that must lie still where chance has once placed it? Locke.

Consider the disproportion between the worst inconveniences that attend incontinence with men, and the eternal displeasure of God. Rogers.

We are freed from many inconveniences, and we enjoy several advantages. Atterbury.

The things of another world, being distant, operate but faintly upon us: to remedy this incon- veniency, we must frequently revolve their certainty and importance. Atterbury.

INCONVENIENT. adj. [inconvenient, Fr. in and convenient, Lat.].

1. Incommodious; disadvantageous.
They lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient for the common people. Spenser on Ireland.

He knows that to be inconvenient, which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalridge.

2. Unfit; inexpedient.

We are not to look that the church should change her public laws, although it chance that for some particular men the same may be found inconvenient, especially when there may be other remedy against particular inconveniences. Hooker.

INCONVENIENTLY. adv. [from inconvenient.]

1. Unfitly; incommodiouly.
2. Unseasonably. Ainsworth.
INCONVERSABLE. adj. [in and conversable.]

versation; unsocial.

He is a person very inconvertible. More.
INCONVERTIBLE. adj. [in and convertible.]
Not transmutable; incapable of change.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permanent parts, and accompanieth the in- convertible portion unto the siege. Brown's Vulgar Er.
INCONVINCIBLE. adj. [in and convincible.] Not to be convinced; not capable of conviction.

INCONVINCIBLY. adv. [from inconvincible.]
Without admitting conviction.

It is injurious unto knowledge obstinately and inconvincibly to side with any one. Brown's Vul. Er.
INCONV. adj. [perhaps from in and conv, to know.]

1. Unlearned; artless. This sense is uncertain.
2. In Scotland it denotes mischievously unlucky: as, he's an incony fellow. This seems to be the meaning in Shakespeare.

O' my troth, and most sweet jests, most incony
and vulgar wit,

When it comes fo' smoothly off. Shakespeare.

INCORPORAL. adj. [in and corporal.] Immaterial distinct from matter; distinct from body.

Why do'st thou bend thine eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do'st hold discourse?

Learned men have not resolved us whether light be corporal or incorporal: corporal they say it cannot be, because then it would neither pierce the air, nor solid diaphanous bodies, and yet every day we see the air illighted: incorporal it cannot be, because sometimes it affecteth the sight with offence. Raleigh.

INCORPORALITY. n. f. [incorporalite, Fr. from incorporal.] Immaterialness; distinctness from body.

INCORPORALLY. adv. [from incorporal.] Without matter; immaterially.

To INCORPORATE. v. a. [incorporer, French.]

1. To mingle different ingredients so as they shall make one mass.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered, except you put a greater quantity of silver to draw to it the less. Bacon.
Who the swelling clouds in bladders ties,
To mollify the stubborn clods with rain,
And scatter'd dust incorporate again? Scudg.

2. To conjoin inseparably, as one body.

Villainous thoughts, Roderigo, when these mutualities fo' marshal the way, hard at hand comes the master and main exercise, the incorporate conclusion. Shakespeare's Othello.

By your leaves, you shall not stay alone,
'Till holy church incorporate two in one. Shakespeare.

Upon my knees
I charm you, by that great vow

Which did incorporate and make us one. Shakespeare.

Death and I
Are found eternal, and incorporate both. Milton.

3. To form into a corporation, or body politick.

In this sense they say in Scotland, the incorporate trades in any community.

The apostle affirmeth plainly of all men christians, that be they Jews or Gentiles, bond or free, they are all incorporate into one company, they all make but one body. Hooker.

The same is incorporate with a majority, and nameth burgeses to parliament. Carew's Survey.

4. To unite; to associate.

It is Caeca, one incorporate to our attempts. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Your most grave belly was deliberate,

Not rash, like his accusers, and thus answered;
True is it, my incorporate friends, quoth he,
That I receive the general food at first,

Which you do live upon. Shakespeare's Coriol.

The Romans did not subdue a country to put the inhabitants to fire and sword, but to incorporate them into their own community. Addison.

5. To work into another mass.

All this learning is ignoble and mechanical among them, and the Confutian only essential and incorporate in their government. Temple.

6. To embody; to give a material form.

Courtesy, that seemed incorporate in his heart, would not be persuaded by danger to offer any offence. Sidey.

The idolators, who worshipped their images as gods, supposed some spirit to be incorporate therein, and so to make together with it a person fit to receive worship. Stillingfleet.

To INCORPORATE. v. n.

1. To unite with something else. It is commonly followed by with.

Painters colours and ashes do better incorporate with oil. Bacon's Natural History.

It is not universally true, that acid salts and oils will not incorporate or mingle. Boyle.

Thy soul
In real darkness of the body dwells,
Shut out from outward light.

To incorporate with gloomy night. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Sometimes it has into.

It finds the mind unprepossessed with any former notions, and so easily gains upon the assent, grows up with it, and incorporates into it. South.

INCORPORATE. adj. [in and corporate.] Immaterial; unbodied. This is now disused to avoid confusion, incorporate being rather used of things mingled.

Moses forbore to speak of angels, and things in- visible and incorporate. Raleigh.

INCORPORATION. n. f. [incorporation, Fr. from incorporate.]

1. Union of divers ingredients in one mass.
Make proof of the incorporation of iron with flint;
for if it can be incorporated without over great charge, the cheapness of the flint doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

This, with some little additional, may further the intrinsick incorporation. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Formation of a body politick.

3. Adoption; union; association: with into.

In him we actually are, by our actual incorpora- tion into that society which bath him for their head. Hooker.

INCORPORAL. adj. [incorporal, Lat. incorporal,
Fr. in and corporal.] Immaterial; unbodied.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

Thus incorporal spirits to smallest forms
Reduc'd their shapes immense. Milton.

Sense and perception must necessarily proceed from some incorporal substance within us. Bentley.

INCORPORALLY. adv. [from incorporal.] Im-materially; without body.

Hearing striketh the spirits more immediately than the other senses, and more incorporally than the smelling. Bacon.

INCORPORITY. n. f. [in and corporality.] Immateriality; distinctness from body.

To INCORPSE. v. a. [in and corpse.] To incorporate; to unite into one body. Not used.

He grew unto his tent,
As he had been incorpse and demy-natur'd

With the brave horse. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

INCORRECT. adj. [in and correct.] Not nicely finished; not exact; inaccurate; full of faults.

The piece you think is incorrect: why take it;
I'm all submission; what you'd have it, make it.

INCORRECTLY. adv. [from incorrect.] Inaccurately; not exactly.

INCORRECTNESS. n. f. [in and correctness.] Inaccuracy; want of exactness.

INCORRIGIBLE. adj. [incorrigible, Fr. in and corrigible.]

1. Bad beyond correction; depraved beyond amendment by any means; erroneous beyond hope of instruction: of persons.

Provok'd by those incorrigible fools,
I left declaiming in pedantick schools. Dryden's J.
Whilst we are incorrigible, God may in vengeance continue to chastise us with the judgment of war. Smalridge.

The most violent party-men are such as have discovered least sense of religion or morality; and when such are laid aside, as shall be found incorrigible, it will be no difficulty to reconcile the rest. Swift.

2. Not capable of amendment: of things.
The loss is many times irrecoverable, and the inconvenience incorrigible. Mor's Divine Dialogues.
What are their thoughts of things, but variety of incorrigible error? L'Estrange.

INCORRIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from incorrigible.]
Hopeless; depravity; badness beyond all means of amendment.

What we call penitence becomes a sad attestation of our incorrigibility. Decay of Piety.

I would not have chiding used, much less blows,
'till obstinacy and incorrigibility make it absolutely necessary. Locke.

INCORRIGIBLY. adv. [from incorrigible.] To a degree of depravity beyond all means of amendment.

Some men appear incorrigibly mad,

Probity of mind, integrity, and incorruptness of manners, is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Woodward.

2. Freedom from decay or degeneration.
To INCRASSATE. v. a. [in and crassus, Lat.] To thicken; the contrary to attenuate.

If the cork be too light to sink under the surface, the body of water may be attenuated with spirits of wine; if too heavy, it may be incrassated with salt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Acids dissolve or attenuate, alkalies precipitate or incrassate. Newton's Opticks.

Acids, such as are austere, as unripe fruits, produce too great a stricture of the fibres, incrassate and coagulate the fluids; from whence pains and rheumatism. Arbuthnot.

INCRASSATION. n. f. [from incrassatus.]

1. The act of thickening.
2. The state of growing thick.

Nothing doth congelate but water; for the determination of quicksilver is fixation, that of milk coagulation, and that of oil incrassation. Brown.

INCRASSATIVE. n. f. [from incrassatus.] Having the quality of thickening.

The two latter indicate restringents to stretch,
and incrassatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

1. To grow more in number, or greater in bulk;
to advance in quantity or value, or in quality capable of being more or less.

Hear and observe to do it, that it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily. Deut.

Profane and vain babbling will increase unto ungodliness. 2 Tim. ii. 16.

From fifty to threescore he loses not much in fancy, and judgment, the effect of observation still increases. Dryden.

Henry, in knots, involv'd his Emma's name
Upon this tree; and, as the tender mark,
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark:
Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That as the wound the passion might increase. Prior.

2. To be fertile.
Fishes are more numerous or increasing than beasts or birds, as appears by their numerous spawn. Hale.

To INCRESS. v. a. [See ENCREASE.] To make

To INCROUTE. } incruter, French.] To cover with an additional coat adhering to the internal matter.

The finer part of the wood will be turned into air, and the grosser stick baked and incrusted upon the sides of the vessel. Bacon's Nat. History.

Some rivers bring forth spars, and other mineral matter, so as to cover and incrute the stones. Woodw.

Save but our army; and let Jove incrute
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust. Pope.

Any of these fun-like bodies in the centers of the several vortices, are so incrusted and weakened as to be carried about in the vortex of the true fun.
Cheyne.

The shield was purchased by Woodward, who incrusted it with a new rust. Arbuthnot and Pope.

INCUSTATION. n. f. [from incrustatio, Fr. from incrusto, Latin.] An adherent covering; something superinduced.

Having such a prodigious stock of marble, their chapels are laid over with such a rich variety of incrustations as cannot be found in any other part.
Addison on Italy.

To INCUBATE. v. n. [from incubo, Latin.] To sit upon eggs.

INCUBATION. n. f. [from incubatio, French; incubatio, Latin.] The act of sitting upon eggs to hatch them.

Whether that vitality was by incubation, or how else, is only known to God. Rakigb's History.

Birds have eggs enough at first conceived in them to serve them, allowing such a proportion for every year as will serve for one or two incuba-tions. Ray on the Creation.

When the whole tribe of birds by incubation produce their young, it is a wonderful deviation, that some few families should do it in a more novel way. Derham.

As the white of an egg by incubation, so can the serum by the action of the fibres be attenuated.
Arbuthnot.

INCUBUS. n. f. [Latin; incubus, Fr.] The nightmare.

The incubus is an inflation of the membranes of the stomach, which hinders the motion of the diaphragma, lungs, and pulse, with a sense of a weight oppressing the breast. Floyer.

To INCULCATE. v. a. [from inculco, Latin; incul-quor,

guer, French.] To impress by frequent admonitions; to enforce by constant repetition.

Manifest truth may deserve sometimes to be inculcated, because we are too apt to forget it. Atterb.

Homer continually inculcates morality, and piety to the gods. Broom's Notes to Pope's Odyssey.

INCULCATION. n. f. [from inculcare.] The act of impressing by frequent admonition; admonitory repetition.

INCULT. adj. [incultus, French; incultus, Latin.] Uncultivated; untilld.

Her forests huge,
Incult, robust and tall, by Nature's hand Planted of old. Thomson's Autumn.

INCULPABLE. adj. [in and culpabilis, Lat.] Unblameable; not reprehensible.

Ignorance, so far as it may be resolved into natural inability, is, as to men, at least inculpable, and consequently not the object of scorn, but pity. South.

INCULPABLY. adv. [in and culpabilis, Latin.] Unblameably; without blame.

As to errors or infirmities, the frailty of man's condition has invincibly, and therefore inculpably, exposed him. South.

INCUMBENCY. n. f. [from incumbens.]

1. The act of lying upon another.

2. The state of keeping a benefice.

These fines are only to be paid to the bishop, during his incumbency in the same see. Swift.

INCUMBENT. adj. [incumbens, Latin.]

1. Resting upon; lying upon.

Then with expanded wings he steers his flight
Aloft, incumbent on the dusky air,
That felt unusual weight. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The ascending parcels of air, having now little more than the weight of the incumbent water to surmount, were able both so to expand themselves as to fill up that part of the pipe which they pervaded, and, by pressing every way against the sides of it, to lift upwards with them what water they found above them. Boyle.

With wings expanded wide ourselves we'll rear,
And fly incumbent on the dusky air. Dryden.

Here the rebel giants lie;

And, when to move th' incumbent load they try,
Ascending vapours on the day prevail. Addison.

Man is the destin'd prey of pestilence,
And o'er his guilty domes
She draws a close incumbent cloud of death. Thomson.

2. Imposed as a duty.

All men, truly zealous, will perform those good works that are incumbent on all Christians. Spratt.

There is a double duty incumbent upon us in the exercise of our powers. L'Estrange.

Thus, if we think and act, we shall shew ourselves duly mindful not only of the advantages we receive from thence, but of the obligations also which are incumbent upon us. Atterbury.

INCUMBENT. n. f. [incumbens, Lat.] He who is in present possession of a benefice.

In many places the whole ecclesiastical dues are in lay hands, and the incumbent lieth at the mercy of his patron. Swift.

To INCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, French.] To embarrass. See ENCUMBER.

My cause is call'd, and that long look'd-for day
Is still incumbent'd with some new delay. Dryd. Juv.

To INCUR. v. a. [incurro, Latin.]

1. To become liable to a punishment or reprehension.

I have incurred displeasure from inferiors for giving way to the faults of others. Hayward.

They, not obeying,
Incurr'd, what could they less? the penalty;
And manifold in sin, deserv'd to fall. Milton.

So judge thou still, presumptuous! 'till the wrath,
Which thou incur'st by flying, meet thy flight
Sev'nfold, and scourge that wisdom back to hell. Milton.

They had a full persuasive that not to do it were to desert God, and consequently to incur damnation. South.

2. To occur; to press on the senses: with to or into.

The motions of the minute parts of bodies are invisible, and incur not to the eye; but yet they are to be deprehended by experience. Bacon.

The mind of man, even in spirituals, acts with corporeal dependance; and so is he helped or hindered in its operations, according to the different quality of external objects that incur into the senses. South.

INCURABILITY. n. f. [incurabilité, Fr. from incurable.] Impossibility of cure; utter insusceptibility of remedy.

We'll instantly open a door to the manner of a proper and improper consumption, together with the reason of the incurability of the former, and facile cure of the other. Harvey.

INCURABLE. adj. [incurable, Fr. in and curable.] Not admitting remedy; not to be removed by medicine; irremediable; hopeless.

Pause not; for the present time's so fick,
That present medicine must be ministr'd,
Or overthrow incurable ensues. Shakespeare.

Stop the rage betime,
Before the wound do grow incurable;
For being green, there is great hope of help. Shakespeare.

A schirrus is not absolutely incurable, because it has been known that fresh pasture has cured it in cattle. Arbutnot.

If idiots and lunatics cannot be found, incurables may be taken into the hospital. Swift.

INCURABLENESS. n. f. [from incurable.] State of not admitting any cure.

INCURABLY. adv. [from incurable.] Without remedy.

We cannot know it is or is not, being incurably ignorant. Locke.

INCURIOS. adj. [in and curious.] Negligent; inattentive.

The Creator did not bestow so much skill upon his creatures, to be looked upon with a careless incurious eye. Derham.

He seldom at the park appear'd;
Yet, not incurious, was inclin'd
To know the converse of mankind. Swift.

INCURSION. n. f. [from incurro, Latin.]

1. Attack; mischievous occurrence.

Sins of daily incursion, and such as human frailty is unavoidably liable to. South.

2. [Incursion, Fr.] Invasion without conquest; inroad; ravage.

Spain is very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to make an hostile invasion, or incursion, upon their havens and roads. Bacon.

Now the Parthian king hath gather'd all his host
Against the Scythian, whose incursions wild
Have wafted Sogdiana. Milton.

The incursions of the Goths disordered the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbutnot on Coins.

INCURVATION. n. f. [from incurvo, Latin.]

1. The act of bending or making crooked.

2. State of being bent; curvity; crookedness.

One part moving while the other rests, one would think, should cause an incurvation in the lip. Glanville.

3. Flexion of the body in token of reverence.

He made use of acts of worship which God hath appropriated; as incurvation, and sacrifice. Stillingfl.

To INCURVATE. v. a. [incurvo, Latin.] To bend; to crook.

Sir Isaac Newton has shewn, by several experiments of rays passing by the edges of bodies, that they are incurvated by the action of these bodies. Cheyne.

INCURVITY. n. f. [from incurvus, Latin.] Crookedness; the state of bending inward.

The incurvity of a dolphin must be taken not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again: strait bodies, in a sudden motion, protruded obliquely downward, appear crooked. Brown.

To INDAGATE. v. a. [indago, Latin.] To search; to beat out.

INDAGATION. n. f. [from indagare.] Search; enquiry; examination.

Paracelsus directs us, in the indagation of colours, to have an eye principally upon salts. Boyle.

Part hath been discovered by himself, and some by human indagation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDAGATOR. n. f. [indigator, Latin.] A searcher; an enquirer; an examiner.

The number of the elements of bodies requires to be searched into by such skilful indagators of nature. Boyle.

To INDART. v. a. [in and dart.] To dart in; to strike in.

I'll look to like, if looking liking move;
But no more deep will I indart mine eye,
Than your consent gives strength to make it fly. Shakespeare.

To INDEBT. v. a.

1. To put into debt.

2. To oblige; to put under obligation.

Forgive us our sins; for we forgive every one that is indebted to us. Luke, xi. 4.

He for himself
Indebted and undone, has nought to bring. Milton.

This blest alliance may
Th' indebted nation bounteously repay. Glanville.

INDEBTED. participial adj. [in and debt.] Obligated by something received; bound to restitution; having incurred a debt. It has to before the person to whom the debt is due, and for before the thing received.

If the course of politick affairs cannot in any good course go forward without fit instruments, and that which fitteth them be their virtues, let polity acknowledge itself indebted to religion, godliness being the chiefest top and well-spring of all true virtues, even as God is of all good things. Hooker.

Few consider how much we are indebted to government, because few can represent how wretched mankind would be without it. Atterbury.

Let us represent to our souls the love and beneficence for which we daily stand indebted to God. Rogers.

We are wholly indebted for them to our ancestors. Swift.

INDECENCY. n. f. [indecence, French.] Any thing unbecoming; any thing contrary to good manners; something wrong, but scarce criminal.

He will in vain endeavour to reform indecency in his pupil, which he allows in himself. Locke.

INDECENT. adj. [indecent, Fr. in and decent.] Unbecoming; unfit for the eyes or ears.

Characters, where obscene words were proper in their mouths, but very indecent to be heard. Dryden.

'Till these men can prove these things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, the use of them, as established amongst us, is necessary. South.

INDECENTLY. adv. [from indecent.] Without decency; in a manner contrary to decency.

INDECIDUOUS. adj. [in and deciduous.] Not falling; not shed. Used of trees that do not shed their leaves in winter.

We find the statue of the sun framed with rays about the head, which were the indeciduous and unshaken locks of Apollo. Brown's Vulg. Err.

INDECLINABLE. adj. [indeclinable, Fr. indeclinabilis, Lat.] Not varied by terminations.

Pondo is an indeclinable word, and when it is joined to numbers it signifies libra. Arbutnot.

INDECOROUS. adj. [indecorus, Lat.] Indecent; unbecoming.

What can be more indecorous than for a creature to violate the commands, and trample upon the authority, of that awful Excellence to whom he owes his life? Norris.

INDECORUM. n. f. [Latin.] Indecency; something unbecoming.

The soft address, the castigated grace,
Are indecorums in the modern maid. Young.

INDEED. adv. [in and deed.]

1. In reality; in truth; in verity.

Yet loving indeed, and therefore constant. Sidney.

Though such assemblies he had indeed for religion's sake, hurtful nevertheless they may prove, as well in regard of their singls to serve the turn of hereticks hereticks and such as privily will venture to mistil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Some, who have not deserved judgment of death, have been for their goods sake caught up and carried straight to the bough: a thing indeed very pitiful and horrible. Spenser.

2. Above common rate. This use is emphatical. Then didst thou utter, I am yours for ever; 'Tis grace indeed. Shakespeare.

Borrows, in mean affairs, his subjects pains; But things of weight and consequence indeed, Himself doth in his chamber them debate. Darwin.

Such sons of Abraham, how highly soever they may have the luck to be thought of, are far from being Israelites indeed. South.

I were a beast, indeed, to do you wrong, I who have lov'd and honour'd you so long. Dryden.

3. This is to be granted that. A particle of connection. This limitation, indeed, of our author will save those the labour who would look for Adam's heir amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery of one next heir amongst men. Locke.

Some sons indeed, some very few we see, Who keep themselves from this infection free. Dryden.

There is nothing in the world more generally dreaded, and yet less to be feared, than death: indeed, for those unhappy men whose hopes terminate in this life, no wonder if the prospect of another seems terrible and amazing. Wake.

4. It is used sometimes as a slight assertion or recapitulation in a sense hardly perceptible or explicable, and though some degree of obscure power is perceived, might, even where it is properly enough inserted, be omitted without miss. I said I thought it was confederacy between the juggler and the two servants; tho' indeed I had no reason so to think. Bacon.

There is indeed no great pleasure in visiting these magazines of war, after one has seen two or three of them. Addison.

5. It is used to note concession in comparisons. Against these forces were prepared to the number of near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion. Bacon.

INDEFATIGABLE. adj. [from indefatigabilis, in and defatigo, Lat.] Unwearied; not tired; not exhausted by labour. Who shall spread his airy flight, Upborne with indefatigable wings, Over the vast abrupt. Milton.

The ambitious person must rise early and sit up late, and pursue his design with a constant indefatigable attendance: he must be infinitely patient and fervile. South.

INDEFATIGABLY. adv. [from indefatigabile.] Without weariness. A man indefatigably zealous in the service of the church and state, and whose writings have highly deserved of both. Dryden.

INEFFECTIBILITY. n. f. [from ineffectibilis.] The quality of suffering no decay; of being subject to no defect. INEFFECTIBLE. adj. [in and defectus, Latin.] Unfailing; not liable to defect or decay. INEFFECTISBLE. adj. [from ineffectibilis.] Not to be cut off; not to be vacated; irrevocable. So indefatigable is our estate in those joys, that, if we do not sell it in reversion, we shall, when once invested, be beyond the possibility of ill husbandry. Decay of Piety.

INDEFENSIBLE. adj. [in and defensus, Latin.] What cannot be defended or maintained. As they extend the rule of consulting Scripture to all the actions of common life, even so far as to the taking up of a straw, so it is altogether false or indefensible. Sanderson.

INDEFINITE. adj. [from indefinitus, Lat. indefini, French.] 1. Not determined; not limited; not settled. Though a position should be wholly rejected, yet that negative is more pregnant of direction than an indefinite; as ashes are more generative than dust. Bacon's Essays.

Her advancement was left indefinite; but thus, that it should be as great as ever any former queen of England had. Baron.

Tragedy and picture are more narrowly circumscribed by place and time than the epick poem: the time of this last is left indefinite. Dryden's Dunciad.

2. Large beyond the comprehension of man, though not absolutely without limits. Though it is not infinite, it may be indefinite; though it is not boundless in itself, it may be so to human comprehension. Spektor.

INDEFINITELY. adv. [from indefinitus.] 1. Without any settled or determinate limitation. We observe that custom, whereunto St. Paul alludeth, and whereof the fathers of the church in their writings make often mention, to shew indefinitely what was done; but not universally to bind for ever all prayers unto one only fashion of utterance. Hooker.

We conceive no more than the letter beareth; that is, four times, or indefinitely more than thrice. Brown.

A duty to which all are indefinitely obliged, upon some occasions, by the express command of God. Smalbridge.

2. To a degree indefinite. If the word be indefinitely extended, that is, so far as no human intellect can fancy any bounds of it, then what we see must be the least part. Ray.

INDEFINITUDE. n. f. [from indefinitus.] Quantity not limited by our understanding, though yet finite. They arise to a strange and prodigious multitude, if not indefinitely, by their various positions, combinations and conjunctions. Hale's Orig. of M.

INDELIBERATE. adj. [from indeliberatus, Fr. in and deliberatus, Lat.] Unpremeditated; done without consideration. Actions proceeding from blandishments, or sweet persuasions, if they be indeliberate, as in children, who want the use of reason, are not presently free actions. Branball.

The love of God better can consist with the indeliberate commissions of many sins, than with an allowed perfidy in any one. Gov. of the Tongue.

INDELIBLE. adj. [from indelibilis, Fr. indelibilis, Lat. in and delibile.] It should be written indelible. 1. Not to be blotted out or effaced. Wilful perpetration of unworthy actions, brands with indelible characters the name and memory. King Charles.

Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil, And spot indelible thy pocket foil. Gay's Trivia.

2. Not to be annulled. They are endued with indelible power from above to feed, to govern this household, and to consecrate pastors and stewards of it to the world's end. Sparr.

INDELICACY. n. f. [in and delicacy.] Want of delicacy; want of elegant decency. Your papers would be chargeable with worse than indelicacy, they would be immoral, did you treat detestable uncleanness as you rally an impudent self-love. Addison.

INDELICATE. adj. [in and delicatus.] Wanting decency; void of a quick sense of decency. INDEMNIFICATION. n. f. [from indemnify.] 1. Security against loss or penalty. 2. Reimbursement of loss or penalty. To INDEMNIFY. v. a. [in and demnify.] 1. To secure against loss or penalty. 2. To maintain unhurt. Insolent signifies rude and haughty, indemnify to keep safe. Watts.

INDEMNITY. n. f. [from indemnité, Fr.] Security from punishment; exemption from punishment. I will use all means, in the ways of amnesty and indemnity, which may most fully remove all fears, and bury all jealousies in forgetfulness. King Charles.

To INDENT. v. a. [in and dent, a tooth, Lat.] To mark any thing with inequalities like a row of teeth; to cut in and out; to make to wave or undulate. About his neck

A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself, Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd The opening of his mouth; but suddenly, Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself, And with indented glides did slip away Into a bush. Shakespeare's As you like it.

The serpent then, not with indented wave, Prone on the ground, as since; but on his rear Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a furling maze! Milton.

Trent, who, like some earth-born giant, forebids His thirty arms along the indented meads. Milton.

The margins on each side do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented. Woodward.

To INDENT. v. n. [from the method of cutting counterparts of a contract together, that, laid on each other, they may fit, and any want of conformity may discover a fraud.] To contract; to bargain; to make a compact. Shall we buy treason, and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves? Sh.

He descends to the solemnity of a pact and covenant, and has indented with us. Decay of Piety.

INDENT. n. f. [from the verb.] Inequality; incisure; indentation. This is little used. Trent shall not wind with such a deep indent, To rob me of to rich a bottom here. Shakespeare.

INDENTATION. n. f. [in and dent, Latin.] An indentation; waving in any figure. The margins do not terminate in a straight line, but are indented; each indentation being continued in a small ridge, to the indentation that answers it on the opposite margin. Woodward.

INDENTURE. n. f. [from indent.] A covenant, so named because the counterparts are indented to cut one by the other; a contract, of which there is a counterpart. In Hall's chronicle much good matter is quite marred with indenture English. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

The crick to his grief will find How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCE. n. f. [from independens, Fr. in and dependens, Lat.] Freedom; exemption from reliance or controul; state over which none has power. Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison's Spectator.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me, My bread and independency: So bought an annual rent or two, And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [from independens, Fr. in and dependens.] 1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on. Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power. The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance; these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority. We shall, in our sermons, take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly justly quarrelled at by presbyterians, independents, or other puritan sectaries. Sunderfon.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Spectator.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things.

Dispose lights and shadows, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dry.

INDESERAT. n. f. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals, are apt to think the fame of his merit a reflection on their own independents. Addison's Spectator.

INDESERATLY. adv. [independens, Fr. in and desert, Latin.] Without cessation.

They continue a month independently. Ray on Great.

INDESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [in and destructible.] Not to be destroyed.

Glass is so compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature. Boyle.

INDETERMINABLE. adj. [in and determinabile.] Not to be fixed; not to be defined or settled.

There is not only obscurity in the end, but beginning of the world; that, as its period is inscrutable, so is its nativity indeterminable. Br. V. Er.

INDETERMINATE. adj. [indeterminans, Fr. in and determinate.] Unfixed; not defined; indefinite.

The rays of the same colour were by turns transmitted at one thickness, and reflected at another thickness, for an indeterminate number of successions. Newton's Opticks.

INDETERMINATELY. adv. [in and determinately.] Indefinitely; not in any settled manner.

His perspicacity discerned the loadstone to respect the North, when ours beheld it indeterminately. Brown.

The depth of the hold is indeterminately expressed in the description. Arbutnot on Coins.

INDETERMINED. adj. [in and determined.] Unsettled; unfixed.

We should not amuse ourselves with floating words of indetermined signification, which we can use in several senses to serve a turn. Locke.

INDETERMINATION. n. f. [in and determination.] Want of determination; want of fixed or stated direction.

By contingents I understand all things which may be done, and may not be done, may happen, or may not happen, by reason of the indetermination or accidental concurrence of the causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.

INDEVOTION. n. f. [indevotion, Fr. in and devotion.] Want of devotion; irreligion.

Let us make the church the scene of our penitence, as of our faults; deprecate our former indevotion, and, by an exemplary reverence, redress the scandal of profaneness. Decay of Piety.

INDEVOT. adj. [indevot, Fr. in and devout.] Not devout; not religious; irreligious.

He prays much, yet curses more; whilst he is meek, but indevot. Decay of Piety.

INDEX. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The discoverer; the pointer out.

Tastes are the indexes of the different qualities of plants, as well as of all sorts of aliment. Arbut.

That which was once the index to point out all virtues, does now mark out that part of the world where least of them resides. Decay of Piety.

2. The hand that points to any thing, as to the hour or way.

They have no more inward self-consciousness of what they do or suffer, than the index of a watch, of the hour it points to. Bentley.

3. The table of contents to a book.

In such indexes, although small

To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mafs

Of things to come, at large. Shakespeare.

If a book has no index, or good table of contents, 'tis very useful to make one as you are reading it; and in your index to take notice only of parts new to you. Watts.

INDEXED. n. f. [in and dexterity.] Want of dexterity; want of readiness; want of handiness; clumsiness; awkwardness.

The indexterity of our consumption-curers demonstrates their dimness in beholding its causes. Harvey on Consumptions.

INDIAN Arrow-root. n. f. [maranta, Lat.] A root.

A sovereign remedy for the bite of wasps, and the poison of the manchineel tree. This root the Indians apply to extract the venom of their arrows. Miller.

INDIAN Cress. n. f. [acrisola, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

INDIAN Fig. n. f. [opuntia, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

INDIAN Red. n. f. Is a species of ochre; a very fine purple earth, and of firm compact texture, and great weight. Hist. on Fossils.

INDICANT. adj. [indicans, Lat.] Showing; pointing out; that which directs what is to be done in any disease.

INDICATE. v. c. [indico, Lat.]

1. To show; to point out.

2. [In physics.] To point out a remedy. See INDICATION.

INDICATION. n. f. [indicatio, Fr. indicatio, from indico, Lat.]

1. Mark; token; sign; note; symptom.

The frequent stops they make in the most convenient places, are a plain indication of their weariness. Addison.

We think that our successes are a plain indication of the divine favour towards us. Atterbury.

2. [In physics.] Indication is of four kinds: vital, preservative, curative, and palliative, as it directs what is to be done to continue life, cutting off the cause of an approaching distemper, curing it whilst it is actually present, or lessening its effects, or taking off some of its symptoms before it can be wholly removed. Quincy.

The depravation of the instruments of mastication is a natural indication of a liquid diet. Arbut.

3. Discovery made; intelligence given.

If a person, that had a fair estate in reversion, should be assured by some skilful physician, that he would inevitably fall into a disease that would totally deprive him of his understanding and memory; if, I say, upon a certain belief of this indication, the man should appear overjoyed at the news, would not all that saw him conclude that the distemper had seized him? Bentley.

4. Explanation; display.

These be the things that govern nature principally, and without which you cannot make any true analysis, and indication of the proceedings of nature. Bacon's Natural History.

INDICATIVE. adj. [indicativus, Lat.]

1. Showing; informing; pointing out.

2. [In grammar.] A certain modification of a verb, expressing affirmation or indication.

The verb is formed in a certain manner to affirm, deny, or interrogate; which formation, from the principal use of it, is called the indicative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INDICATIVELY. adv. [from indicative.] In such a manner as shows or betokens.

These images, formed in the brain, are indicatively of the same species with those of sense. Greav.

TO INDICT. See INDITE, and its derivatives.

INDICTION. n. f. [indictio, Fr. indico, Lat.]

1. Declaration; proclamation.

After a legation ad res repetendas, and a refusal, and a denunciation and indiction of a war, the war is left at large. Bacon.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the Great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterwards, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to Christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D.

313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. n. f. [indifference, Fr. indifference; indifference, Latin.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bos.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true. Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, till determined by the will. Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators. Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou can't not but greatly commend it. Watts.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance. Addison.

A place which we must pass through, not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy. Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,

All fortitude of mind supplies;

For how can stony bowels melt,

In those who never pity felt? Swift.

He will let you know he has got a chap with as much indifference as he would a piece of public news. Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar. Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty. Hooker.

INDIFFERENT. adj. [indifferent, Fr. indifferent, Latin.]

1. Neutral; not determined to either side.

Doth his majesty

Incline to it or no?

—He seems indifferent. Shakspeare, H. V.

Being indifferent, we should receive and embrace opinions according as evidence gives the attestation of truth. Locke.

Let guilt or fear

Disturb man's rest; Cato knows neither of them: Indifferent in his choice to sleep or die. Addison.

2. Unconcerned; inattentive; regardless.

One thing was all to you, and your fondness made you indifferent to every thing else. Templ.

It was a law of Solon, that any person who, in the civil commotions of the republic, remained neuter, or an indifferent spectator of the contending parties, should be condemned to perpetual banishment. Addison's Freeholder.

But how indifferent soever man may be to eternal happiness, yet surely to eternal misery none can be indifferent. Rogers.

3. Not to have such difference as that the one is for its own sake preferable to the other.

The nature of things indifferent is neither to be commanded nor forbidden, but left free and arbitrary. Hooker.

Customs, which of themselves are indifferent in other kingdoms, because exceeding evil in this realm, by reason of the inconveniences which followed thereupon. Davies.

Though at first it was free, and in my choice whether or no I should publish these discourses; yet yet, the publication being once resolved, the dedication was not so indifferent. South.

This I mention only as my conjecture, it being indifferent to the matter which way the learned shall determine. Locke.

4. Impartial; disinterested.

Metcalf was partial to none, but indifferent to all; a master for the whole, and a father to every one. Ascham.

The soul is not now hindered in its actions by the distemperature of indisposed organs. Glanville.

4. To disorder slightly with regard to health.

Though it weakened, yet it made him rather indisposed than sick, and did no ways disfigure him from studying. Walton.

5. To make unfavourable: with towards.

The king was sufficiently indisposed towards the persons or the principles of Calvin's disciples. Clarendon.

INDISPOSEDNESS. n. f. [from indisposed.] State of unfitness or disinclination; disordered state.

It is not any innate harshness in piety that renders the first essays of it unpleasant; that is owing only to the indisposedness of our own hearts. D. of P.

INDISPOSITION. n. f. [indisposition, Fr. from indispose.]

1. Disorder of health; tendency to sickness; slight disease.

The king did complain of a continual infirmity of body, yet rather as an indisposition in health than any set sickness. Hayward.

I have known a great fleet lose great occasions, by an indisposition of the admiral, while he was neither well enough to exercise, nor ill enough to leave the command. Temple.

Wisdom is still looking forward, from the first indispositions, into the progress of the disease. L'Estr.

His life seems to have been prolonged beyond its natural term, under those indispositions which hung upon the latter part of it. Addis. Freeb.

2. Disinclination; dislike: with to or towards.

The indisposition of the church of Rome to reform herself, must be no stay unto us from performing our duty to God. Hooker.

The mind, by every degree of affected unbelief, contracts more and more of a general indisposition towards believing. Atterbury.

INDISPUTABLE. adj. [in and disputable.] Uncontrovertible; incontestable; evident; certain.

There is no maxim in politics more indisputable, than that a nation should have many honours to reserve for those who do national services. Addison.

The apostle asserts a clear indisputable conclusion, which could admit of no question. Rogers.

INDISPUTABLENESS. n. f. [from indisputable.] The state of being indisputable; certainty; evidence.

INDISPUTABLY. adv. [from indisputable.]

The thing itself is questionable, nor is it indisputably certain what death she died. Brown's Vul. Err.

2. Without opposition.

They questioned a duty that had been indisputably granted to so many preceding kings. Howell.

INDISSOLVABLE. adj. [in and dissolvable.]

1. Indissoluble; not separable as to its parts.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth tasteless and indissolvable in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallic salt. Newton.

2. Obligatory; not to be broken; binding for ever.

Deposition and degradation are without hope of any remission, and therefore the law styles them an indissoluble bond; but a censure, a dissolvable bond. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDISSOLUBILITY. n. f. [indissolubilitas, Fr. from indissoluble.]

1. Resistance to a dissolving power; firmness; stabilities.

What hoops hold this mass of matter in so close a pressure together, from whence has steel its firmness, and the parts of a diamond their hardness and indissolubility? Lecke.

2. Perpetuity of obligation.

INDISSOLUBLE. adj. [indissoluble, Fr. indissolubilis, Lat. in and dissolvable.]

1. Resisting all separation of its parts; firm; stable.

When common gold and lead are mingled, the lead may be severed almost unaltered; yet if, instead of the gold, a tantillum of the red elixir be mingled with the saturn, their union will be indissoluble, that there is no possible way of separating the diffused elixir from the fixed lead. Boyle.

2. Binding for ever; subsisting for ever; not to be loosed.

Far more comfort it were for us to be joined with you in bands of indissoluble love and amity, to live as if our persons being many, our souls were but one. Hooker.

There is the supreme and indissoluble confanguinity between men, of which the heathen poet faith we are all his generation. Bacon's Holy War.

They might justly wonder, that men so taught, so obliged to be kind to all, should behave themselves so contrary to such heavenly instructions, such indissoluble obligations. South.

INDISSOLUBLENES. n. f. [from indissoluble.] Indissolubility; resistance to separation of parts.

Adam, though consisting of a composition intrinsically dissolvable, might have held, by the Divine Will, a state of immortality and indissolubleness of his composition. Hale.

INDISSOLUBLY. adv. [from indissoluble.]

1. In a manner resisting all separations.

On they move
Indissolubly firm; nor obvious hill,
Nor straitning vale, nor wood, nor stream divide
Their perfect ranks. Milton.

The remaining ashes, by a further degree of fire, may be indissolubly united into glass. Boyle.

They willingly unite,
Indissolubly firm; from Dubris south
To northern Orades. Phillips.

2. For ever obligatorily.

INDISTINCT. adj. [indistinctus, Fr. in and distinctus, Latin.]

1. Not plainly marked; confused.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought, the rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct. Shakspere.

As water is in water.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note;
But indistinct, and neither sweet nor clear. Dryden.

When we speak of the infinite divisibility of matter, we keep a very clear and distinct idea of division and divisibility; but when we come to parts too small for our senses, our ideas of these little bodies become obscure and indistinct. Watts.

2. Not exactly discerning.

We throw out our eyes for brave Othello,
Ev'n till we make the main and th' aerial blue
An indistinct regard. Shakspere.

INDISTINCTION. n. f. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusion; uncertainty.

The indistinction of many of the same name, or the misapplication of the act of one unto another, hath made some doubt. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Omission of discrimination; indiscrimination.

An indistinction of all persons, or quality of all orders, is far from being agreeable to the will of God. Spratt.

INDISTINCTLY. adv. [from indistinct.]

1. Confusedly; uncertainly; without definiteness or discrimination.

In its sides it was bounded distinctly, but on its ends confusedly and indistinctly, the light there vanished by degrees. Newton's Opticks.

Making trial thereof, both the liquors soaked indistinctly through the bowl. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDISTINCTNESS. n. f. [from indistinct.] Confusion; uncertainty; obscurity.

There is unevenness or indistinctness in the style

VOL. I. N^o. 24. 5 X of

of these places, concerning the origin and form of the earth. Barnes's Theop.

Old age makes the cornea and coat of the crystalline humour grow flatter; so that the light, for want of a sufficient refraction, will not converge to the bottom of the eye, but beyond it, and by consequence paint in the bottom of the eye a confused picture; and according to the indistinctness of this picture, the object will appear confused. New.

INDISTURBANCE. n. f. [in and disturb.] Calmness; freedom from disturbance.

What is called by the Stoicks apathy, and by the Scepticks indisturbance, seems all but to mean great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

INDIVIDUAL. adj. [individu, individual, Fr. individuel, Lat.]

1. Separate from others of the same species; single; numerically one.

Neither is it enough to consult, secundum genera, what the kind and character of the person should be; for the most judgment is shown in the choice of individuals. Bacon.

They present us with images more perfect than the life in any individual. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Must the whole man, amazing thought! return To the cold marble, or contracted urn!

And never shall those particles agree, That were in life this individual he? Prior.

Know all the good that individuals find, Lie in three words, health, peace, and competence. Pope.

We see each circumstance of art and individual of nature summoned together by the extent and fecundity of his imagination. Pope's Pref. to the Ill. It would be wise in them, as individual and private mortals, to look back a little upon the storms they have raised, as well as those they have escaped. Swift.

The object of any particular idea is called an individual: so Peter is an individual man, London is an individual city. Watts.

2. Undivided; not to be parted or disjoined.

To give thee being, I lent

Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart,

Substantial life, to have thee by my side

Henceforth an individual solace dear. Milton.

Long eternity shall greet our bliss

With an individual kiss. Milton.

Under his great vicegerent reign abide

United as one individual soul,

For ever happy. Milton.

INDIVIDUALITY. n. f. [from individual.] Separate or distinct existence.

He would tell his instructor, that all men were not singular; that individuality could hardly be predicated of any man; for it was commonly said that a man is not the same he was, and that mad men are beside themselves. Arbutnot.

INDIVIDUALLY. adv. [from individual.]

1. With separate or distinct existence: numerically.

How should that subsist solitarily by itself, which hath no substance, but individually the very same whereby others subsist with it? Hooker.

2. Not separably; incommunicably.

I dare not pronounce him omniscious, that being an attribute individually proper to the godhead, and incommunicable to any created substance. Hakewill on Providence.

TO INDIVIDUATE. v. a. [from individuat, Lat.]

To distinguish from others of the same species; to make single.

Life is individuated into infinite numbers, that have their distinct sense and pleasure. More.

No man is capable of translating poetry, who, besides a genius to that art, is not a master both of his author's language and of his own; nor must we understand the language only of the poet, but his particular turn of thought and expression, which are the characters that distinguish and indivuate him from all other writers. Dryden.

INDIVIDUATION. n. f. [from individuate.] That which makes an individual.

What is the principle of an individuation? Or what is it that makes any one thing the same as it was before? Watts.

INDIVIDUITY. n. f. [from individuat, Lat.] The state of being an individual; separate existence.

INDIVINITY. n. f. [in and divinity.] Want of divine power. Not in use.

How openly did the oracle betray his indivinity unto Cræsus, who being ruined by his amphibology, and expostulating with him, received no higher answer than the excuse of his impotency? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INDIVISIBILITY. n. f. [from indivisible.]

INDIVISIBleness. s. State in which no more division can be made.

A pebble and mortar will as soon bring any particle of matter to indivisibility as the acutest thought of a mathematician. Locke.

INDIVISIBLE. adj. [indivisible, Fr. in and divisible.] What cannot be broken into parts; so small as that it cannot be smaller; having reached the last degree of divisibility.

By atom, no body will imagine we intend to express a perfect indivisible, but only the least sort of natural bodies. Digby.

Here is but one indivisible point of time observed, but one action performed; yet the eye cannot comprehend at once the whole object. Dryden.

INDIVISIBLY. adv. [from indivisible.] So as it cannot be divided.

INDOCILE. adj. [in and docile.] Unteachable; inflexible of instruction.

INDOCIL. adj. [indocile, Fr. indocile, Latin.] Unteachable; incapable of being instructed.

These certainly are the fools in the text, indocil, intractable fools, whose stolidity can baffle all arguments, and is proof against demonstration itself. Bentley's Sermons.

INDOCILITY. n. f. [indocilit, Fr. in and docility.] Unteachableness; refusal of instruction.

TO INDOCTRINATE. v. a. [indoctrinar, old French.] To instruct; to tincture with any science, or opinion.

Under a master that discoursed excellently, and took much delight in indocinating his young unexperienced favourite, Buckingham had obtained a quick conception of speaking very gracefully and pertinently. Clarendon.

They that never peep beyond the common belief, in which their easy understandings were at first indocinated, are strongly assured of the truth of their receptions. Glanville.

INDOCTRINATION. n. f. [from indoctrinate.] Instruction; information.

Although postulates are very accommodable unto junior indoctrinations, yet are these authorities not to be embraced beyond the minority of our intellectuals. Brown.

INDOLENCE. n. f. [in and doles, Lat. indolence, French.]

1. Freedom from pain.

As there must be indolence where there is happiness, so there must not be indigency. Burn's Theory.

I have ease, if it may not rather be called indolence. Hough.

2. Laziness; inattention; listlessness.

Let Epicurus give indolence as an attribute to his gods, and place it in the happiness of the blest: the Divinity which we worship has given us not only a precept against it, but his own example to the contrary. Dryden.

The Spanish nation, roused from their ancient indolence and ignorance, seem now to improve trade. Bolingbroke.

INDOLENT. adj. [French.]

1. Free from pain. So the chirurgeons speak of an indolent tumour.

See ENDOW.

INDRAUGHT. n. f. [in and draught.]

1. An opening in the land into which the sea flows.

Ebbs and flows there could be none, when there was no indraughts, bays, or gulphs to receive a flood. Raleigh.

2. Inlet; passage inwards.

Navigable rivers are indraughts to attain wealth. Bacon.

TO INDRE/SCH. v. a. [from drench.] To soak; to drown.

My hopes lie drown'd; in many fathoms deep They lie indrench'd. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.

INDUBIOUS. adj. [in and dubious.] Not doubtful; not suspecting; certain.

Hence appears the vulgar vanity of reposing an indubious confidence in those antipestifential spirits. Harvey.

INDUBITABLE. adj. [indubitabilis, Lat. indubitabile, Fr. in and dubitable.] Undoubted; unquestionable; evident; certain in appearance; clear; plain.

When general observations are drawn from so many particulars as to become certain and indubitable, these are jewels of knowledge. Watts.

INDUBITABLY. adv. [from indubitabile.] Undoubtedly; unquestionably.

If we transport these proportions from audible to visible objects, there will indubitably result from either a graceful and harmonious contentment. Wotton's Architectura.

The patriarchs were indubitably invested with both these authorities. Spenser.

L appeal to all sober judges, whether our souls may be only a mere echo from clashing atoms; or rather indubitably must proceed from a spiritual substance. Besley.

INDUBITATE. adj. [indubitatus, Lat.] Unquestioned; certain; apparent; evident.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, he knew it was condemned by parliament, and tended directly to the disinherison of the line of York, held then the indubitately heirs of the crown. Bacon's Henry VII.

I have been tempted to wonder how, among the jealousies of state and court, Edgar Atheling could subsist, being then the apparent and indubitately heir of the Saxon line. Wotton.

TO INDUCE. v. a. [induire, Fr. induce, Latin.]

1. To influence to any thing; to persuade: of persons.

The self-same argument in this kind, which doth but induce the vulgar sort to like, may constrain the wiser to yield. Hooker.

This lady, albeit she was furnished with many excellent endowments both of nature and education, yet would she never be induced to entertain marriage with any. Heyward.

Desire with thee still longer to converse Induc'd me. Milton.

Let not the covetous design of growing rich induce you to ruin your reputation, but rather to satisfy yourself with a moderate fortune; and let your thoughts be wholly taken up with acquiring to yourself a glorious name. Dryden.

2. To produce by persuasion or influence: of things.

Let the vanity of the times be restrained, which the neighbourhood of other nations have induced, and we strive apace to exceed our pattern. Bacon.

As belief is absolutely necessary to all mankind, the evidence for inducing it must be of that nature as to accommodate itself to all species of men. Forster.

3. To offer by way of induction, or consequential reasoning.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymemes unto the people, and take up popular conceits. Brown.

4. To inculcate; to enforce.

This induces a general change of opinion, concerning the person or party like to be obeyed by the greatest or strongest part of the people. Temple.

5. To cause extrinsically; to produce; to effect.

Sour things induce a contraction in the nerves placed placed in the mouth of the stomach, which is a great cause of appetite. Bacon.

Acidity, as it is not the natural state of the animal fluids, but induced by aliment, is to be cured by aliment with the contrary qualities. Arbutnot.

6. To introduce; to bring into view.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not to proper. Brown.

The poet may be seen inducing his personages in the first Iliad, where he discovers their humours, interests, and designs. Pope.

7. To bring on; to superinduce; to effect gradually.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUCEMENT. n. f. [from induce.] Motive to any thing; that which allures or persuades to any thing.

The former inducements do now much more prevail, when the very thing hath ministered further reason. Hooker.

Many inducements, besides Scripture, may lead me to that, which if Scripture be against, they are of no value, yet otherwise are strongly effectual to persuade. Hooker.

That mov'd me to't,

Then mark th' inducement. Shakespeare, Henry VIII.

He lives

Higher degree of life; inducement strong

For us. Milton.

My inducement hither,

Was not at present here to find my son. Milton.

Instances occur of oppression, to which there appears no inducement from the circumstances of the actors. Rogers.

INDUCER. n. f. [from induce.] A persuader; one that influences.

If a person thus instituted, though not induced, takes a second benefice, it shall make the first void. Ayliffe's Parergon.

INDUCTION. n. f. [inductio, Fr. inductio, Lat.]

1. Introduction; entrance; anciently preface.

These promises are fair, the parties sure,

And our induction full of prosperous hope. Shakespeare.

2. Induction is when, from several particular propositions, we infer one general: as, the doctrine of the Socinians cannot be proved from the gospels, it cannot be proved from the acts of the apostles, it cannot be proved from the epistles, nor the book of revelations; therefore it cannot be proved from the New Testament. Watts's Logic.

The inquisition by induction is wonderful hard; for the things reported are full of fables, and new experiments can hardly be made but with extreme caution. Bacon.

Mathematical things are only capable of clear demonstration: conclusions in natural philosophy are proved by induction of experiments, things moral by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony. Tillotson.

Although the arguing from experiments and observations by induction be no demonstration of general conclusions, yet it is the best way of arguing which the nature of things admits of, and may be looked upon as so much the stronger by how much the induction is more general; and if no exception occur from phenomena, the conclusion may be general. Newton's Opticks.

He brought in a new way of arguing from induction, and that grounded upon observation and experiments. Baker.

3. The act or state of taking possession of an ecclesiastical living.

INDUCTIVE. adj. [from induct.]

1. Leading; persuasive: with to.

A brutish vice,

Inductive mainly to the sin of Eve. Milton.

2. Capable to infer or produce.

Abatements may take away infallible conclusion in these evidences of fact, yet they may be probable and inductive of credibility, though not of science. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Proceeding not by demonstration, but induction.

To INDU'E. v. a. [induo, Latin.]

1. To invest; to clothe.

One first matter all,

Indu'd with various forms. Milton.

2. It seems sometimes to be, even by good writers, confounded with endow or indow, to furnish or enrich with any quality or excellence.

The angel, by whom God indu'd the waters of Bethesda, with supernatural virtue, was not seen; yet the angel's presence was known by the waters. Hooker.

His pow'rs, with dreadful strength indu'd. Chap.

To INDULGE. v. a. [indulgeo, Latin.]

1. To encourage by compliance.

The lazy glutton safe at home will keep, Indulge his sloth, and fatten with his sleep. Dryden.

2. To fondle; to favour; to gratify with concession; to foster. If the matter of indulgence be a single thing, it has with before it; if it be a habit, it has in: as, he indulg'd himself with a draught of wine; and, he indulg'd himself in shameful drunkenness.

A mother was wont to indulge her daughters with dogs, squirrels, or birds; but then they must keep them well. Locke.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies that we indulge ourselves in the gratifications of this life very sparingly. Atterbury.

3. To grant not of right, but favour.

Ancient privileges, indulg'd by former kings to their people, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors. Taylor's Rule.

The virgin ent'ring bright, indulg'd the day

To the brown cave, and brush'd the dreams away. Dryden.

But since among mankind so few there are,

Who will conform to philosophick fare, This much I will indulge thee for thy ease,

And mingle something of our times to please. Dry.

My friend, indulge one labour more,

And seek Atrides. Pope's Odyssey.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light

Indulge dread chaos and eternal night! Pope.

To INDULGE. v. n. [A Latinism not in use.]

To be favourable; to give indulgence: with to.

He must, by indulging to one sort of reprovable discourse himself, defeat his endeavours against the rest. Government of the Tongue.

INDULGENCE. n. f. [indulgentia, Fr. from in-

INDULGENCY. n. f. [indulgentia, Fr. from in-

1. Fondness; fond kindness.

Restraint she will not brook;

And left to herself, if evil thence ensue,

She first his weak indulgence will accuse. Milton.

The glories of our idle,

Which yet like golden ore, unripe in beds,

Expect the warm indulgency of heaven. Dryden.

2. Forbearance; tenderness: opposite to rigour.

They err, that through indulgence to others, or fondness to any sin in themselves, substitute for repentance any thing less. Hammond on Fundamentals.

In known images of life, I guess

The labour greater, as th' indulgence less. Pope.

3. Favour granted; liberality.

If all these gracious indulgences are without any effect on us, we must perish in our own folly. Rogers.

4. Grant of the church of Rome, not defined by themselves.

Thou, that giv'st whores indulgences to sin,

I'll canvass thee. Shakespeare's Henry VI.

Indulgences, dispenses, pardons, bulls,

The sport of winds. Milton.

In purgatory, indulgences, and superogation, the assertors seem to be unanimous in nothing but profit. Decay of Piety.

Leo X. is deservedly infamous for his base prostitution of indulgences. Atterbury.

INDULGENT. adj. [indulgent, Fr. indulgent, Lat.]

1. Kind; gentle; liberal.

God has done all for us that the most indulgent Creator could do for the work of his hands. Rogers.

2. Mild; favourable.

Hereafter such in thy behalf shall be

Th' indulgent censure of posterity. Waller.

3. Gratifying; favouring; giving way to: with eff.

The feeble old, indulgent of their ease. Dryden.

INDULGENTLY. adv. [from indulgent.] Without severity; without censure; without self-reproach; with indulgence

He that not only commits some act of sin, but lives indulgently in it, is never to be counted a regenerate man. Hammond.

INDUL'T. n. f. [Ital. and French.] Privilege

INDUL'TO. n. f. or exemption.

To INDURATE. v. n. [induro, Lat.] To grow

hard; to harden.

Stones within the earth at first are but rude earth or clay; and so minerals come at first of juices concrete, which afterwards indurate. Bacon.

That plants and ligneous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiments in coral lines. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INDURATE. v. a.

A contracted indurated bladder is a circumstance sometimes attending on the stone, and indeed an extraordinary dangerous one. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To harden the mind; to sear the conscience.

INDURATION. n. f. [from indurate.]

1. The state of growing hard.

This is a notable instance of condensation and induration, by burial under earth, in caves, for a long time. Bacon.

2. The act of hardening.

3. Obduracy; hardness of heart.

Schism is marked out by the apostle as a kind of petrifying crime, which induces that induration to which the fearful expectation of wrath is consequent. Decay of Piety.

INDUSTRIOUS. adj. [industrius, Fr. industrius,

Latin.]

1. Diligent; laborious; assiduous: opposed to stupid.

Frugal and industrious men are commonly friendly to the established government. Temple.

2. Laborious to a particular end: opposite to remiss.

He himself, being excellently learned, and industry to seek out the truth of all things concerning the original of his own people, hath set down the testimony of the ancients truly. Spenser.

Let our just censures

Attend the true event, and put we on Industrious soldiery. Shakespeare.

His thoughts were low:

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds

Timorous and slothful. Milton.

3. Designed; done for the purpose.

The industrious perforation of the tendons of the second joints of fingers and toes, draw the tendons of the third joints through. More.

Observe carefully all the events which happen either by an occasional concurrence of various causes, or by the industrious application of knowing men.

Watts on the Mind.

INDUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from industrius.]

1. With habitual diligence; not idly.

2. Diligently; laboriously; assiduously.

Great Britain was never before united under one king, notwithstanding that the uniting had been industriously attempted both by war and peace. Bac.

3. For the set purpose; with design.

Some friends to vice, industriously defend

These innocent diversions, and pretend

That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dry.

I am not under the necessity of declaring myself, and I industriously conceal my name, which wholly exempts me from any hopes and fears. Swift.

INDUSTRY. n. f. [industria, Fr. industria, Lat.]

Diligence; assiduity; habitual or actual laborious-

ness.

The sweat of industry would dry and die,

But for the end it works to. Shakespeare's C.

INE

See the laborious bee
For little drops of honey flee,
And there with humble sweets content her industry.

Providence would only initiate mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers.

To INEBRIATE. v. a. [inebrio, Lat.] To intoxicate; to make drunk.

Wine sugared inebriates less than wine pure: sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine itself.

Fish, enter far in and meeting with the fresh water, as if inebriated, turn up their bellies and are taken.

To INEBRIATE. v. n. To grow drunk; to be intoxicated.

At Constantinople, fish, that come from the Euxine sea into the fresh water, do inebriate and turn up their bellies, so as you may take them with your hand.

INEBRIATION. n. f. [from inebrio.] Drunkenness; intoxication.

That cornelians and bloodstones may be of virtue, experience will make us grant; but not that an amethyst prevents inebriation.

INEFFABILITY. n. f. [from ineffabilis.] Unspeakableness.

INEFFABLE. adj. [ineffabilis, Fr. in finalis, Lat.] Unspeakable; unutterable; not to be expressed. It is used almost always in a good sense.

To whom the Son, with calm aspect, and clear, lightning divine, ineffable, serene!

Made answer.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitted conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation.

INEFFABLY. adv. [from ineffabilis.] In a manner not to be expressed.

He all his father full express'd, ineffably into his face receiv'd.

INEFFECTIVE. adj. [ineffectivus, Fr. in and efficax.] That which can produce no effect; unactive; inefficient; useless.

As the body, without blood, is a dead and lifeless trunk; so is the word of God, without the spirit, a dead and ineffective letter.

He that assures himself he never errs, will always err; and his presumptions will render all attempts to inform him ineffective.

INEFFECTUAL. adj. [in and effectual.] Unable to produce its proper effect; weak; wanting power.

The public reading of the Apocrypha they condemn as a thing effectual unto evil: the bare reading even of Scriptures themselves they dislike, as a thing ineffectual to do good.

The death of Patroclus, joined to the offer of Agamemnon, which of itself had proved ineffectual.

INEFFECTUALLY. adv. [from ineffectual.] Without effect.

INEFFECTUALNESS. n. f. [from ineffectual.] Inefficacy; want of power to perform the proper effect.

St. James speaks of the ineffectualness of some men's devotion, Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss.

INEFFICACIOUS. adj. [inefficax, Fr. in efficax, Lat.] Unable to produce effects; weak; feeble. Ineffectual rather denotes an actual failure; and inefficacious, an habitual impotence to any effect.

Is not that better than always to have the rod in hand, and, by frequent use, misapply and render ineffectual this useful remedy?

INEFFICACY. n. f. [in and efficacia, Lat.] Want of power; want of effect.

INELEGANCE. n. f. [from inelegant.] Absence of beauty; want of elegance.

INELEGANT. adj. [inelegans, Lat.]

1. Not becoming; not beautiful: opposite to elegant.

What order, so contriv'd as not to mix tastes, not well join'd, inelegant, but bring taste after taste, upheld with kindest change.

INE

This very variety of sea and land, hill and dale, which is here reputed to inelegant and unbecoming, is indeed extremely charming and agreeable.

2. Wanting ornament of language.

Modern critics, having never read Homer, but in low and inelegant translations, impute the mean-ness of the translation to the poet.

INELOQUENT. adj. [in and eloquent, Lat.] Not persuasive; not oratorical: opposite to eloquent.

INEPT. adj. [in ptus, Lat.]

1. Trifling; foolish.

The works of Nature, being neither useless nor inept, must be guided by some principle of knowledge.

After their various unsuccessful ways, Their fruitless labours and inept essays, No cause of these appearances they'll find, But power exerted by th' Eternal Mind.

2. Unfit for any purpose; useless.

When the upper and vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile matter, such as was wholly inept and improper for the formation of vegetables.

INEPTLY. adv. [ineptus, Lat.] Triflingly; foolishly; unftly.

None of them are made foolishly or ineptly.

All things were at first disposed by an omniscient intellect, that cannot contrive ineptly.

INEPTITUDE. n. f. [from ineptus, Lat.] Unfitness.

The grating and rubbing of axes against the sockets, wherein they are placed, will cause some ineptitude or resistency to rotation of the cylinder.

An omnipotent agent works infallibly and irresistibly, no ineptitude or stubbornness of the matter being ever able to hinder him.

There is an ineptitude to motion from too great a laxity, and an ineptitude to motion from too great tension.

INEQUALITY. n. f. [inequalitas, Fr. from inequalitas, and inequalis, Lat.]

1. Difference of comparative quantity.

There is so great an inequality in the length of our legs and arms, as makes it impossible for us to walk on all four.

2. Unevenness; interchange of higher and lower parts.

The country is cut into so many hills and inequalities as renders it defensible.

The glass seemed well wrought; yet when it was quick-silvered, the reflexion discovered innumerable inequalities all over the glass.

If there were no inequalities in the surface of the earth, nor in the seasons of the year, we should lose a considerable share of the vegetable kingdom.

3. Disproportion to any office or purpose; state of not being adequate; inadequateness.

The great inequality of all things to the appetites of a rational soul appears from this, that in all worldly things a man finds not half the pleasure in the actual possession that he proposed in the expectation.

4. Change of state; unlikeness of a thing to itself; difference of temper or quality.

In some places, by the nature of the earth, and by the situation of woods and hills, the air is more unequal than in others; and inequality of air is ever an enemy to health.

5. Difference of rank or station.

If so small inequality between man and man make in them modesty a commendable virtue, who respecting superiors as superiors, can neither speak nor stand before them without fear.

INERRABILITY. n. f. [from inerrabilis.] Exemption from error; infallibility.

I cannot allow their wisdom such a completeness and inerrability as to exclude myself from judging.

INERRABLE. adj. [in and err.] Exempt from error.

We have conviction from reason, or decisions

from the inerrable and requisite conditions of sense.

INfallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on.

INfallibility and inerrableness is assumed by the Romish church, without any inerrable ground to build it on.

INERRABLY. adv. [from inerrabilis.] With security from error; infallibly.

INERRINGLY. adv. [in and erring.] Without error; without mistake; without deviation.

That divers limners at a distance, without copy, should draw the same picture, is more conceivable, than that matter should frame itself to inerringly according to the idea of its kind.

INERT. adj. [inert, Lat.] Dull; sluggish; motionless.

Body alone, inert and brute you'll find; The cause of all things is by you assign'd.

INformer of the planetary train!

Without whose quickening glance their cumbrous orbs

Were brute unlively mass, inert and dead.

INERTLY. adv. [from inert.] Sluggishly; dully.

Ye pow'rs,

Suspend awhile your force inertly strong.

INESCAPTION. n. f. [in and escap, Lat.] The act of baiting.

INESTIMABLE. adj. [inestimabilis, Fr. in estimabilis, Lat.] Too valuable to be rated; transcending all price.

I thought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks, A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;

Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl, Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels.

The pope thereupon took advantage, abusing the simplicity of the king to suck out inestimable sums of money, to the intolerable grievance of both the clergy and temporality.

There we shall see a sight worth dying for, that blessed Saviour, of whom the Scripture does so excellently entertain us, and who does so highly deserve of us upon the score of his infinite perfections, and his inestimable benefits.

And shall this prize, th' inestimable prize, On that rapacious hand for ever blaze!

INEVIDENT. adj. [inevidens, Fr. in and evidens.] Not plain; obscure. Not in use.

The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, and a stable assent unto things inevident, upon authority of the divine revealer.

INEVITABILITY. n. f. [from inevitabilis.] Impossibility to be avoided; certainty.

By liberty I do understand neither a liberty from sin, misery, servitude, nor violence, but from necessity, or rather necessitation; that is, an universal immunity from all inevitability and determination to one.

INEVITABLE. adj. [inevitabilis, Fr. in evitabilis, Lat.] Unavoidable; not to be escaped.

I had a pass with him: he gives me the stuckin with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable.

Fate inevitable

Subdues us.

Since my inevitable death you know, You safely unavailing pity show.

INEVITABLY. adv. [from inevitabilis.] Without possibility of escape.

The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

How inevitably does an immoderate laughter end in a sigh!

If they look no farther than the next line, it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point.

Inflammations of the bowels oft inevitably tend to the ruin of the whole.

If our sense of hearing were exalted, we should have no quiet or sleep in the silentest nights, and we must inevitably be stricken deaf or dead with a clap of thunder.

INEXCUSABLE. adj. [inexcusabilis, Fr. in excusabilis, Lat.]

his, Lat. in and excusable.] Not to be excused; not to be palliated by apology.

It is a temerity, and a folly inexcusable, to deliver up ourselves needlessly into another's power. L'E.

As we are an island with ports and navigable seas, we should be inexcusable if we did not make these blessings turn to account. Addis. Freeholder.

Such a favour could only render them more odurate, and more inexcusable; it would inance their guilt. Atterbury.

If learning be not encouraged under your administration, you are the most inexcusable person alive. Swift.

A fallen woman is the more inexcusable, as, from the cradle, the sex is warned against the delusions of men. Clarissa.

INEXCUSABLENESS. n. f. [from inexcusable.] Enormity beyond forgiveness or palliation.

Their *inexcusable*ness is stated upon the supposition that they knew God, but did not glorify him. South.

INEXCUSABLY. adv. [from inexcusable.] To a degree of guilt or folly beyond excuse.

It will inexcusably condemn some men, who having received excellent endowments, yet have frustrated the intention. Brown.

INEXHAUSTABLE. adj. [in and exhaust.] That which cannot evaporate.

A new laid egg will not so easily be boiled hard, because it contains a great stock of humid parts, which must be evaporated before the heat can bring the inexhaustable parts into consistance. Brown.

INEXHAUSTED. adj. [in and exhausted.] Unemptied; not possible to be emptied.

So wert thou born into a tuneful strain, An early, rich, and inexhausted vein. Dryden.

To make stoney; to turn to stone.

Some natural spring waters will inlapidate wood;
so that you shall see one piece of wood, whereof the part above the water shall continue wood, and the part under water shall be turned into a kind of gravelly stone. Bacon.

INLA'Y. v. a. [in and lay.]
1. To diversify with different bodies inserted into the ground or substratum.

They are worthy
To inlay heav'n with stars. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

Look, how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patens of bright gold. Shakespeare.

A saphire throne, inlaid with pure
Amber, and colours of the show'ry arch. Milton.

The timber bears a great price with the cabinet-makers, when large, for inlaying. Mortimer's Husb.

Here clouded canes 'midst heaps of toys are found,

And inlaid tweezer-cases strow the ground. Gay.

2. To make variety by being inserted into bodies; to variegate.

Sea girt isles,
That like to rich and various gems inlay
The unadorned bosom of the deep. Milton.

INLA'Y. n. f. [from the verb.] Matter inlaid;
wood formed to inlay.

Under foot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Eroder'd the ground. Milton.

INLA'W. v. a. [in and law.] To clear of outlawry or attainder.

It should be a great incongruity to have them to make laws, who themselves were not inlaw'd. Bac.

INLET. n. f. [in and let.] Passage; place of ingress; entrance.

Doors and windows, inlets of men and of light,
I couple together; I find their dimensions brought under one. Wotton.

She through the porch and inlet of each sense Dropt in ambrosial oils till she reviv'd. Milton.

I desire any one to assign any simple idea, which is not received from one of these inlets. Locke.

A fine bargain indeed, to part with all our commodious ports, which the greater the inlet is are so much the better, for the imaginary pleasure of a straight shore. Bentley.

INLETS amongst broken lands and islands. Ellis.

INLY. adj. [from in.] Interior; internal; interior.

Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou would'st as soon go kindle fire with snow,

As seek to quench the fire of love with words. Sh.

INLY. adv. Internally; within; secretly; in the heart.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.

I've inly wept,
Or should have spoke ere this. Shakespeare's Tempest.

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd,
Smote him into the midriff with a stone,

That beat out life. Milton.

These growing thoughts, my mother soon perceiving

By words at times cast forth, inly rejoic'd. Milton.

The soldiers shout around with gen'rous rage;
He prais'd their ardor: inly pleas'd to see

His host. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

INMATE. n. f. [in and mate.]
Inmates are those that be admitted to dwell for their money jointly with another man, though in several rooms of his mansion-house, passing in and out by one door.

So spake the enemy of mankind, inclos'd
In serpent, inmate bad! and toward Eve

Address'd his way. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown, Suspected to a fequent king, who seeks
To stop their overgrowth, as inmate guests

Too numerous. Milton's Par. Lost.

Home is the sacred refuge of our life,
Secur'd from all approaches but a wife:

If thence we fly, the cause admits no doubt,
None but an inmate foe could force us out. Dryden.

INMOST. adj. [from in.] Deepest within; remostest from the surface.

'Tis you must dig with mattock and with spade,
And pierce the inmost centre of the earth. Shakespeare.

Rising sighs and falling tears,
That show too well the warm desires,
The silent, slow, consuming fires,

Which on my inmost vitals prey,
And melt my very soul away. Addison on Italy.

Comparing the quantity of light reflected from the several rings, I found that it was most copious from the first or inmost, and in the exterior rings became less and less. Newton.

He sends a dreadful groan: the rocks around
Through all their inmost hollow caves rebound. Pope.

I got into the inmost court. Gulliver's Travels.

INN. n. f. [inn, Saxon, a chamber.]
1. A house of entertainment for travellers.

How all this is but a fair inn,
Of fairer guests which dwell within. Sidney.

Palmer, quoth he, death is an equal doom
To good and bad, the common inn of rest;

But, after death, the trial is to come,
When best shall be to them that lived best. F. Q.

Now day is spent,
Therefore with me you may take up your inn. F. Q.

The West, yet glimmers with some streaks of day,

Now spurs the lated traveller apace
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end.

One may learn more here in one day, than in a year's rambling from one inn to another. Locke.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go some and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all.

It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

TO INN. v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

In thyself dwell:

Inn any where: continuance maketh hell. Donne.

TO INN. v. a. To house; to put under cover.

He that ears my land, spares my team, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shakespeare.

Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter: all was inn'd at last into the king's barn. Bacon's Henry VII.

Mow clover and rye-grass, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.

INNA'VE. } adj. [inné, Fr. innatus, Latin.]
INNATED. }

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superad-ded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper.

The Druiian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Howell.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter.

INNA'TENESS. n. f. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNAVIGABLE. adj. [innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be pass'd by failing.

If you so hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden's Æn.

INNER. adj. [from in.] Interior; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Spenser.

This attracts the foul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;

That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch
pray'd;

Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

INNERMOST. adj. [from inner.] It seems less proper than inmost.] Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNHO'LDER. n. f. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

INNINGS. n. f. Lands recovered from the sea.

INNKEEPER. n. f. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innkeeper. Taylor's Rule of living bdy.

A factious innkeeper was hanged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the staleness of his provisions. Addison.

INNOCENCE. } n. f. [innocence, French, innocen- INNOCENCY. } tia, Latin.]

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.

What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a conscience of its own innocence and integrity. Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

INN

It will help me nothing

To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whitest part black. Shakespeare.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

3. Harmless; innoxious.
The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burns's Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shakespeare.
We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

INNOCENT, adj. [innocent, Fr. innocent, Lat.]
1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T'appease an angry god. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Wreck on innocent frail man is lofs. Milton.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleopatra.

The peasant innocent of all these hills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryd.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope

INNOCENT, n. f.

So pure an innocent as that same lamb. Fairy Q.
Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakespeare's Othello.

If murth'ring innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakespeare.

2. A natural; an ideot.

Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hooker.

INNOCENTLY, adv. [from innocent.]

1. Without guilt.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly. South.

2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.

3. Without hurt.

Balls at his feet lay innocently dead. Corwley.

INNOCUOUS, adj. [innocuous, Latin.] Harmless in effects.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

INNOCUOUSLY, adv. [from innocuous.] Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Brown.

INNOCUOUSNESS, n. f. [from innocuous.] Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Digby on Bodies.

To INNOVATE, v. a. [innovare, Fr. innover, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which they have chanced upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.

Former things

Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act till then unknown. Dryd.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate. Dryden.

2. To change by introducing novelties.

From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship. South.

INO

INNOVATION, n. f. [innovation, Fr. from innovare.] Changed by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue staydness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations. Hooker.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovates greatly, but quietly and by degrees. Bacon.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue; but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution. Swift.

INNOVATOR, n. f. [innovateur, Fr. from innovare.]

1. An introducer of novelties.

I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' public weal. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator:

and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and counsel shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end? Bacon's Essays.

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship. South.

INNOXIOUS, adj. [innocius, Lat.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.

Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horse's manes. Digby.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innocius qualities. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane,
The meteor sits. Thomson's Autumn.

2. Pure from crimes.

Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innocius through his age. Pope.

INNOXIOUSLY, adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.

2. Without harm suffered.

Animals that can innociusly digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested. Brown.

INNOXIOUSNESS, n. f. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUE'NDU, n. f. [innuendo, from innuere, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned. L'Estrange.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo. Dryden.

Purue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows. Swift.

INNUMERABLE, adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumérabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more. Mil.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts. Locke.

INNUMERABLY, adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS, adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'Twould be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumerable boughs. Mil.

I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innumerable boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows. Pope's Ody.

To INOCULATE, v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate, May's Virgil.
Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month. Evelyn.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate. Dryden.

To INOCULATE, v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate. Cleaveland.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation. Cleaveland.

INOCULATION, n. f. [inoculatio, Latin, from inoculare.]

1. Inoculation is practised upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmynes. Chute a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make a horizontal cut across the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the foot-stalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud. Miller.

In the stem of Elaiana they all met, and came to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation. Hewel.

2. The practice of transplanting the small-pox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection. Quincy.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease. Arbutnot.

INOCULATOR, n. f. [from inoculare.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the small-pox by inoculation.

Had John a Gaddefden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators. Friend's Hist. of Physick.

INODORATE, adj. [in and odoratus, Latin.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured. Bacon's Natural History.

INODOROUS, adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, inactive, in spid, inodorous liquor. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INOFFENSIVE, adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking. Fleetwood.

However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors. Rogers.

2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, till it be grown inoffensive to them. Locke.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive most. Milton.

With what'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,
Thy offensive fancies never bite. Dryden.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation. Phillips.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction.

A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell. Milton.

INOPINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat. inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INOPPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus, Lat.] Un- seasonable; inconvenient.

INORDINACY. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregu- larity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation. Gov. of T.

INORDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Lat.] Ir- regular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegi- ance; but being straight left unto their own in- ordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught. Spenser on Ireland.

Thence raise

At last dissembler'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain arms, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engendering pride. Milton.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all un- quietness of spirit. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

INORDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregu- larly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself. Taylor.

INORDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregu- larity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philo- sophy to clear a lie from that intrinsic inordina- tion and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lie was absolutely and universally sinful. South.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.] Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and most inorganical parts of matter.

TO INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Lat.] To unite by apposition or contact.

This fifth conjugation of nerves is branched by inosculating with nerves. Derham's Physico-Theology.

INOSCULATION. n. f. [from inosculate.] Union by conjunction of extremities.

The almost infinite ramifications and inosculations of all the several forts of vessels may easily be de- tected by glasses. Ray.

INQUEST. n. f. [inquest, Fr. inquisitio, Lat.]

1. Judicial enquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in? Asterbury.

2. [In law.] The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impan- nelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict to judgment passes: for the judge faith, the jury finds the fact thus: then is the law thus, and so we judge. Corwell.

3. Enquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Wotton.

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will betray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position. Wotton.

The youthful hero, with returning light,
Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night. Pope.

TO INQUINATE. v. a. [inquinare, Lat.] To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food so inquinated their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION. n. f. [inquinatio, Lat. from inqui- nate.] Corruption; pollution.

Their causes and axioms are so full of imagina- tion, and so infected with the old received theo- ries, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such im- perfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the an- cients inquinatio, or inconcoction, which is a kind of putrefaction. Bacon.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquiry or inquest may be made.

TO INQUIRE. v. n. [inquire, French; inquire, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion: with of before the per- son asked.

You have oft inquir'd

After the shepherd that complain'd of love. Shak.

Herod inquired of them diligently, Matthew.
They began to inquire among themselves, which of them it was that should do this thing? Luke.

He sent Hadoram to king David, to inquire of his welfare. 1 Chron. xviii. 10.

It is a subject of a very noble inquiry, to inquire of the more subtle perceptions; for it is another key to open nature, as well as the house. Bacon.

2. It is used with into when something is already imperfectly known.

It may deserve our best skill to inquire into those rules, by which we may guide our judgment. South.

The step-dame poison for the son prepares;
The son inquires into his father's years. Dryden.

3. Sometimes with of.

Under their grateful shade Æneas sat;
His left young Pallas kept, fix'd to his side,
And oft of winds inquir'd, and of the tide. Dryden's Æneid.

4. With after when something is lost or missing; in which case for is likewise used.

Inquire for one Saul of Tarsus. Acts, ix. 11.

They are more in danger to go out of the way, who are marching under a guide that will mislead them, than he that is likelier to be prevailed on to inquire after the right way. Locke.

5. With about, when fuller intelligence is de- sired.

To those who inquired about me, my lover would answer, that I was an old dependent upon his fam- ily. Swift.

6. To make examination.

Awful Rhadamanthus rules the state:
He hears and judges each committed crime,
Inquires into the manner, place, and time. Dry. Æ.

TO INQUIRE. v. a.

1. To ask about; to seek out: as, he inquired the way.

2. To call to name. Obsolete.

Canute had his portion from the rest,
The which he call'd Canutium, for his hire,
Now Cantinum, which Kent we commonly in- quire. Spenser.

3. It is now more commonly written enquire.

INQUIRER. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Searcher; examiner; one curious and in- quisitive.

What satisfaction may be obtained from those violent disputers, and eager inquirers into what day of the month the world began. Brown's Vulgar Err.

What's good doth open to th' inquirers stand,
And itself offers to th' accepting hand. Denham.

Superficial inquirers may satisfy themselves that the parts of matter are united by ligaments. Glanville.

This is a question only of inquirers, not dispu- ters, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find,
That ev'ry insect of each different kind,

In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays, Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackmer.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men who were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controver- sies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the ques- tion is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free? Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgment of opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physi- cian makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

INSO-

INSOMU'CH. conj. [in so much.]

1. So that; to such a degree that.

It hath ever been the use of the conqueror to despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insomuch as the countries about Ætna have amended made them, for the mischiefs the eruptions do. Bacon.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Estrange.

They made the ground uneven about their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison's Guardian.

2. This word is growing obsolete.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspicere, inspectum, Lat.]
To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspectio, French, inspectio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; pressing care. In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted into improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Asterb.

We should apply ourselves to study the perfections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Asterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

Nor th' inspired Castalian spring. Milton.

Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,
And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryd. Æ.

The letters are often read to the young religious, to inspire with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;
Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryd.

INSPIRER. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspicer of mankind, be all honour. Denham.

TO INSPIRIT. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspirit and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonious renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspirits the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Asterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope's Pref. to the Il.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,
And the gay conscience of a life well spent,
Calm every thought, inspirit every grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.

TO INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and, spissus, Lat.]

To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspiassate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not easy to resolve into vapour. Bac.

This oil farther inspiassated by evaporation, turns into balm. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspiassate.] The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspiassation of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspiassation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilitas, from instabilis, Fr, instabilis, Lat.] Inconstancy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to the other; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. Addison's Freeholder.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installar, Fr. in and stall.]

To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the installment of this noble duke
In the seat royal? Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. The feat in which one is installed.

Search Windfor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you scour;
Each fair installment, coat and several crest
With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shakespeare.

INSTANCE. n. f. [instance, French.]

INSTANCY. n. f. [instance, French.]

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hooker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument. Not now in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that folly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love. Shakespeare.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years. Ayl. Par.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shakespeare.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace; sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been flung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Addison.

The greatest saints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Asterbury.

Suppose the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat. Bentley.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker on L.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the First, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

3. Not fractional; not broken into fractions.

INTEGRAL. n. f. The whole made up of parts.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, nerves, and integrals of the human body. Hale.

Consider the infinite complications and combinations of several concurrences to the constitution and operation of almost every integral in nature. Hale.

A mathematical whole is better called integral, when the several parts, which make up the whole, are distinct, and each may subsist apart. Watts.

INTEGRITY. n. f. [from integritas, Fr. integritas, from integer, Lat.]

1. Honesty; uncorrupt mind; purity of manners; uncorruptedness.

Your dishonour

Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state

Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.

Macduff

INT

Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Whoever has examined both parties cannot go far towards the extremes of either, without violence to his integrity or understanding. Swift.
The libertine, instead of attempting to corrupt our integrity, will conceal and disguise his own vices. Rogers.

1. Purity; genuine unadulterate state.
Language continued long in its purity and integrity. Hale.

3. Intireness; unbroken whole.
Take away this transformation, and there is no
chasm, nor can it affect the integrity of the action.
Broom.

INTEGUMENT. n. f. [integumentum, intego, Lat.]
Any thing that covers or envelops another.
He could no more live without his frize coat than without his skin: it is not indeed so properly his coat, as what the anatomists call one of the integruments of the body. Addison.

INTELLECT. n. f. [intellect, Fr. intellectus, Lat.]
The intelligent mind; the power of understanding.

All heart they live, all head, all eye, all ear,
All intellect, all sense. Milton.

All those arts, rarities, and inventions, which vulgar minds gaze at, and the ingenious pursue, are but the reliques of an intellect defaced with sin and time. South.

INTELLECTION. n. f. [intellection, Fr. intellectio, Lat.]
The act of understanding.

Simple apprehension denotes the soul's naked intellection of an object, without either composition or deduction. Glanville's Scepis.

They will say 'tis not the bulk or substance of the animal spirit, but its motion and agility, that produces intellection and sense. Bentley's Sermons.

INTELLECTIVE. adj. [intellectif, Fr. from intel- lectif.]
Having power to understand.

If a man as intellective be created, then either he means the whole man, or only that by which he is intellective. Glanville.

INTELLECTUAL. adj. [intellectuel, Fr. intellectu- alis, low Latin.]

1. Relating to the understanding; belonging to the mind; tranfacted by the understanding.

Religion teaches us to present to God our bodies as well as our souls: if the body serves the soul in actions natural and civil, and intellectual, it must not be eased in the only offices of religion.
Taylor.

2. Mental; comprising the faculty of understanding; belonging to the mind.

Logic is to teach us the right use of our reason, or intellectual powers. Watts.

3. Ideal; perceived by the intellect, not the senses.

In a dark vision's intellectual scene,
Beneath a bow'r for sorrow made,
The melancholy Cowley lay. Cowley.

A train of phantoms in wild order rose,
And, join'd, this intellectual scene compose. Pope.

4. Having the power of understanding.
Anaxagoras and Plato term the Maker of the world an intellectual worker. Hooker.

Who would lose
Though full of pain, this intellectual being,
Those thoughts that wander through eternity,
To perish rather, swallowed up and lost,
In the wide womb of uncreated night,
Devoid of sense and motion? Milton.

5. Proposed as the object not of the senses but intellect: as, Cudworth names his book the intel- lectual system of the universe.

INTELLECTUAL. n. f. Intellect; understanding; mental powers or faculties. This is little in use.

Her husband not nigh,
Whose higher intellectual more I shun. Milton.

The fancies of most, like the index of a clock, are moved but by the inward springs of the corporeal machine; which, even on the most sublimed intellectual, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

INT

I have not consulted the repute of my intelle- tuals in bringing their weaknesses into such discern- ing preferences. Glanville.

INTELLIGENCE. } n. f. [intelligence, French,
INTELLIGENCY. } intelligentia, Lat.]

1. Commerce of information; notice; mutual communication; account of things distant or fecret.

It was perceived there had not been in the catholicks so much foresight as to provide that true intelligence might pass between them of what was done. Hooker.

A mankind witch! hence with her, out of door!
A most intelligence bawd! Shakspere.

He furnished his employed men liberally with money, to draw on and reward intelligences: giving them also in charge to advertise what they found. Bacon's Henry VII.

The advertisements of neighbour princes are always to be regarded, for that they receive intelli- gence from better authors than persons of inferior note. Hayward.

Let all the passages
Be well secur'd, that no intelligence
May pass between the prince and them. Denham.

Those tales had been sung to lull children asleep, before ever Berofus set up his intelligence office at Coos. Bentley.

2. Commerce of acquaintance; terms on which men live one with another.

Faction followers are worse to be liked, which follow not upon affection to him with whom they range themselves; whereupon commonly ensueth that ill intelligence that we see between great personages. Bacon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites. Clarendon.

3. Spirit; unbodied mind.

How fully hast thou satisfied me, pure Intelligence of heav'n, angel! Milton.

There are divers ranks of created beings intermediate between the glorious God and man, as the glorious angels and created intelligences. Hale.

They hoped to get the favour of the houses, and by the favour of the houses they hoped for that of the intelligences, and by their favour for that of the supreme God. Stillingfleet.

The regularity of motion, visible in the great variety and curiosity of bodies, is a demonstration that the whole mass of matter is under the con-

Unskilful with what words to pray, let me Interpret for him. Milton's Paradise Lost.

INTERPRETABLE. adj. [from interpret.] Capable of being expounded or deciphered.

No man's face is actionable: these singularities are interpretable from more innocent causes. Collier.

INTERPRETATION. n. f. [interpretation, Fr. inter- pretatio, Lat. from interpret.]

1. The act of interpreting: explanation.

This is a poor epitome of your's,
Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Look how we can, or sad or merrily,
Interpretation will misquote our looks. Shakespeare.

2. The sense given by an interpreter; exposition.

If it be obscure or uncertain what they meant, clarity, hope, constraineth no man, which standeth doubtful of their minds, to lean to the hardest and worst interpretation that their words can carry. Hooker.

The primitive Christians knew how the Jews, who preceded our Saviour, interpreted these predictions, and the marks by which the Messiah would be discovered; and how the Jewish doctors, who succeeded him, deviated from the interpretations of their forefathers. Addison.

3. The power of explaining.

We beseech thee to prosper this great sign, and to give us the interpretation and use of it in mercy. Bacon.

INTERPRETATIVE. adj. [from interpret.] Collected by interpretation.

Though the creed apostolick were sufficient, yet when the church hath erected that additional bulwark against heretics, the rejecting their additions may justly be deemed an interpretative siding with heresies. Hammond.

INTERPRETATIVELY. adv. [from interpretative.] As may be collected by interpretation.

By this provision the Almighty interpretatively speaks to him in this manner: I have now placed thee in a well-furnished world. Ray on the Creation.

INTERPRETER. n. f. [interprete, Fr. interpre- ter, Lat.]

1. An explainer; an expofitor; an expounder.

What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, or weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd: what worst, as oft Hitting a grosser quality, is cry'd up
For our best act. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

In the beginning the earth was without form and void; a fluid, dark, confused mass, and so it is understood by interpreters, both Hebrew and Christian. Burnet.

We think most mens actions to be the interpre- ters of their thoughts. Locke.

2. A translator.

Nor word for word be careful to transfer,
With the same faith as an interpreter. Sherburne.

How shall any man, who hath a genius for history, undertake such a work with spirit, when he considers that in an age or two he shall hardly be understood without an interpreter. Swift.

INTERPUCTION. n. f. [interpunctio, Fr. interp- punctio, Latin.] Pointing between words or sentences.

INTERREGNUM. n. f. [Lat.] The time in which a throne is vacant between the death of a prince and accession of another.

Next ensu'd a vacancy,
Thousand worse passions than possess'd
The interregnum of my breast:

Bless me from such an anarchy! Cowley.

He would shew the queen my memorial with the first opportunity, in order to have it done in this interregnum of suspension of title. Swift.

INTERREGN. n. f. [interregne, Fr. interregnum,
Latin.] Vacancy of the throne.

The king knew there could not be any interreg- n or suspension of title. Bacon's Henry VII.

To INTERROGATE. v. a. [interrogo, Lat. inter- rogo, Fr.] To examine; to question.

To INTERROGATE. v. n. To ask; to put questions.

By his instructions touching the queen of Naples, it seemeth he could interrogate touching beauty. Bacon's Henry VII.

His proof will be retorted by interrogating, Shall the adulter and the drunkard inherit the kingdom of God? Hammond.

INTERROGATION. n. f. [interrogation, Fr. inter- rogatio, Lat.]

1. The act of questioning.

2. A question put; an enquiry.

How demurely soever such men may pretend to sanctity, that interrogation of God presses hard upon them, Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights? Government of the Tongue.

This variety is obtained by interrogations to things inanimate; by beautiful digressions, but those short. Pope.

3. A note that marks a question: thus? as,
Does Job serve God for nought?

INTERROGATIVE. n. f. [interrogatif, Fr. inter- rogativus, Lat.] Denoting a question; expressed in a questionary form of words.

asker of questions.

INTERROGATORY. n. f. [interrogatoire, Fr.] A question; an enquiry.

He with no more civility began in captious manner to put interrogatories unto him. Sidney.

Nor time, nor place,

Will serve long interrogatories.

Shakespeare's Cymbeline.
What earthly name to interrogatories

Can take the free breath of a sacred king? Shak.

The examination was summed up with one question, Whether he was prepared for death?
The boy was frighted out of his wits by the last dreadful interrogatory. Addison.

INTERROGATORY. adj. Containing a question; expressing a question; as, an interrogatory sentence.

To INTERRUPT. v. a. [interrompre, Fr. inter- ruptus, Lat.]

1. To hinder the process of any thing by breaking in upon it.

Rage doth rend

Like interrupted waters, and o'erbear
What they are used to bear. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

He might securely enough have engaged his body of horse against their whole inconsiderable army, there being neither tree nor bush to inter- rupt his charge. Clarendon.

This motion of the heavenly bodies seems partly uninterrupted, as that of the first moveable interpolated and interrupted. Hale.

2. To hinder one from proceeding by interposition.

neither interrupt men in the midst of their talk.

Ecclus. xi. 8.

3. To divide; to separate; to rescind from continuity.

INTERRUPT. adj. Containing a chasm.

Seest thou what rage

Transports our adversary, whom no bounds,
Nor yet the main abyfs wide interrupt, can hold?

Milton.

INTERRUPTEDLY. adv. [from interrupted.]
Not in continuity; not without stoppages.

The incident light that meets with a grosser liquor, will have its beams either refracted or imbibed, or else reflected more or less interruptedly than they would be, if the body had been unmoistened. Boyle on Colours.

INTERRUPTER. n. f. [from interrupt.] He who interrupts.

INTERRUPTION. n. f. [interruption, Fr. inter- ruptio, Latin.]

1. Interposition; breach of continuity.

Places severed from the continent by the inter- ruption of the sea. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Intervention; interposition.

You are to touch the one as soon as you have given a stroke of the pencil to the other, lest the interruption of time cause you to lose the idea of one part. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Hindrance; stop; let; obstruction.

Bloody England into England gone, O'erbearing interruption, spite of France. Shakespeare.

4. Intermision.

This way of thinking on what we read, will be a rub only in the beginning; when custom has made it familiar, it will be dispatched without resting or interruption in the course of our reading.

Locke.

Amidst the interruptions of his sorrow, seeing his penitent overwhelmed with grief, he was only able to bid her to be comforted. Addison's Spectator.

INTERSCAPULAR. adj. [inter and scapula, Lat.]

Placed between the shoulders.

To INTERSCIND. v. a. [inter and scindo, Latin.]

INTERV/IEW. n. f. [interview, French.] Mutual

INT

for a formal, appointed, or important meeting or conference.

The day will come, when the passions of former enmity being allayed, we shall with ten times redoubled tokens of reconciled love shew ourselves each towards other the same, which Joseph and the brethren of Joseph were at the time of their interview in Egypt. Hecker.

His fears were, that the interview betwixt England and France might, through their amity, Breed him some prejudice. Shakespeare.

Such happy interview, and fair event Of love, and youth not lost, songs, garlands, flowers,

And charming symphonies, attach'd the heart Of Adam. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To INTERVOLVE. v. a. [intervolve, Latin.] To involve one within another.

Mytical dance! which yonder starry sphere Of planets, and of fix'd, in all her wheels Resembles nearest; mazes intricate, Eccentric, intervolv'd, yet regular,

Then most, when most irregular, they seem. Milton.

To INTERWEAVE. v. a. preter. interwove, part. pass. interwoven, interwove, or interwaved. [inter and weave.] To mix one with another in regular texture; to intermingle.

Then laid him down Under the hospitable covert night

Of trees thick interwoven. Milton's Paradise Lost.

At last Words interwove with sighs found out their way. Milton.

I sat me down to watch upon a bank With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honeysuckle. Milton.

None Can say here nature ends, and art begins,

But mixt like th' elements, and born like twins, So interwov'd, so like, so much the same:

None, this mere nature, that mere art can name. Denham.

The proud theatres disclose the scene, Which interwoven Britons seem to raise,

And show the triumph which their shame displays. Dryden.

He so interweaves truth with probable fiction, that he puts a pleasing fallacy upon us. Dryden.

It appeared a vast ocean planted with islands, that were covered with fruits and flowers, and interwoven with a thousand little shining seas that ran among them. Addison.

Orchard and flower-garden lie so mixt and interwoven with one another, as to look like a natural wilderness. Spenser.

The Supreme Infinite could not make intelligent creatures, without implanting in their natures a most ardent desire, interwoven in the substance of their spiritual natures, of being reunited with himself. Chrysostom's Phil. Principles.

I do not altogether disapprove the interweaving texts of scripture through the file of your sermon. Swift.

To INTERWISH. v. a. [inter and wish.] To wish mutually to each other.

The venom of all stepdames, gamester's gall, What tyrants and their subjects interwish,

All ill fall on that man. Donne.

A person excommunicated is rendered infamous, and intestable both actively and passively. Ayliffe.

INTE/STATE. adj. [intestat, Fr. intestatus, Lat.] Wanting a will; dying without a will.

Why should calamity be full of words? — Windy attorneys to their client woes,

Airy succeders of intestate joys, Poor breathing orators of miseries. Shakespeare.

Present punishment pursues his maw, When forfeited and swell'd, the peacock raw,

He bears into the bath; whence want of breath, Reptitions, apoplex, intestate death. Dryden's Fud.

INTESTI/NAL. adj. [intestinal, Fr. from intestine.] Belonging to the guts.

The mouths of the lacteals are opened by the intestinal intestinal tube, affecting a straight instead of a spiral cylinder.

INTESTINE. adj. [intestin, Fr. intestinus, Lat.]

1. Internal; inward; not external.

Of these inward and intestine enemies to prayer, there are our past sins to wound us, our present cares to distract us, our distempered passions to disorder us, and a whole swarm of loose and floating imaginations to molest us.

Intestine war no more our passions wage, Ev'n giddy factions hear away their rage.

2. Contained in the body.

Intestine stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs, And moon-struck madnefs.

A wooden jack, which had almost Loft, by diffuse, the art to roast,

A sudden alteration feels,

Increases'd by new intestine wheels.

3. Domestick, not foreign. I know not whether the word be properly used in the following example of Shakespeare: perhaps for mortal and intestine should be read mortal intestine.

Since the mortal and intestine jars

'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us,

It hath in solemn synods been decreed,

T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns.

But God, or Nature, while they thus contend,

To these intestine disorders put an end.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,

And dreadful series of intestine wars.

Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest tears.

INTESTINE. n. f. [intestinum, Lat. intestine, Fr.]

The gut; the bowel: most commonly without a singular.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by an acrid substance taken inwardly.

To INTHRA'LL. v. a. [in and thrall.] To enslave; to shackle; to reduce to servitude. A word now seldom used, at least in prose.

What though I be inthrall'd, he seems a knight, And will not any way dishonour me.

The Turk has sought to extinguish the ancient memory of those people which he has subjected and inthrall'd.

Authors to themselves in all

Both what they judge, and what they chuse; for so I form'd them free, and free they must remain Till they inthrall themselves.

She foothes, but never can inthrall my mind:

Why may not peace and love for once be join'd?

INTHRA'LEMENT. n. f. [from inthrall.] Servitude; slavery.

Moses and Aaron, sent from God to claim

His people from inthralment, they return

With glory and spoil back to their promis'd land.

To INTHRO'NE. v. a. [in and throne.] To raise to royalty; to seat on a throne; commonly intransitive.

One, chief, in gracious dignity inthrone'd,

Shines o'er the rest.

It is in our power to confine our friendships and intimacies to men of virtue.

INTIMATE. adj. [intimado, Spanish; intimus, Latin.]

1. Inmost; inward; intestine.

That what I mention'd was of God, I knew

From intimate impulse.

Fear being so intimate to our natures, it is the strongest bond of laws.

2. Near; not kept at distance.

Moses was with him in the retirements of the Mount, received there his private instructions; and when the multitude were thundered away from any approach, he was honoured with an intimate and immediate admission.

3. Familiar; closely acquainted.

United by this sympathetick bond,

You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.

INTIMATE. n. f. [intimado, Spanish; intime, Fr. intimus, Latin.] A familiar friend; one who is trusted with our thoughts.

The design was to entertain his reason with a more equal converse, assign him an intimate whose intellect as much corresponded with him as did the outward form.

To INTIMATE. v. a. [intimer, French; intimare, low Latin.] To hint; to point out indirectly, or not very plainly.

Alexander Van Suchten tells us, that by a way he intimates, may be made a mercury of copper, not of the silver colour of other mercuries, but green.

The names of simple ideas and substances, with the abstract ideas in the mind, intimate some real existence, from which was derived their original pattern.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;

'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,

And intimates eternity to man.

INTIMATELY. adv. [from intimate.]

1. Closely; with intermixture of parts.

The same economy is observed in the circulation of the chyle with the blood, by mixing it intimately with the parts of the fluid to which it is to be assimilated.

2. Nearly; inseparably.

Quality, as it regards the mind, has its rise from knowledge and virtue, and is that which is more essential to us, and more intimately united with us.

3. Familiarly; with close friendship.

INTIMATION. n. f. [intimation, Fr. from intimare.] Hint; obscure or indirect declaration or direction.

Let him strictly observe the first stirrings and intimations; the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in his heart.

Of those that are only probable we have some reasonable intimations, but not a demonstrative certainty.

Besides the more solid parts of learning, there are several little intimations to be met with on medals.

INTIME. adj. Inward; being within the mafs; not being external, or on the surface; internal. Not used.

As to the composition or dissolution of mixed bodies, which is the chief work of elements, and requires an intime application of the agents, water hath the principality and excess over earth.

To INTIMIDATE. v. a. [intimider, French; in and timidus, Lat.] To make fearful; to daunt; to make cowardly.

At that tribunal stands the writing tribe, Which nothing can intimidate or bribe;

Time is the judge.

Now guilt once harbour'd in the conscious breast, intimidates the brave, degrades the great.

INTIRE. n. f. [intier, Lat. entier, French; better written entire, which see, and all its derivatives.] Whole; undiminished; broken.

The lawful power of making laws, to command whole politic societies of men, belongeth so properly unto the same intire societies, that for any prince to exercise the same of himself, and not either by express commission immediately and personally received from God, or else by authority derived at the first from their consent upon whose persons he imposes laws, it is no better than mere tyranny.

INTIRENESS. n. f. [from intire; better entireness.] Wholeness; integrity.

So shall all times find me the same; You this intireness better may fulfil,

Who have the pattern with you still.

INTO. prep. [in and to.]

1. Noting entrance with regard to place: opposed to out of.

Water introduces into vegetables the matter it bears along with it.

Acrid substances, which pass into the capillary tubes, must irritate them into greater contraction.

2. Noting entrance of one thing into another.

If iron will acquire by mere continuance an habitual inclination to the site it held, how much more may education, being a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature?

To give life to that which has yet no being, is to frame a living creature, fashion the parts, and having fitted them together, to put into them a living soul.

3. Noting penetration beyond the outside, or some action which reaches beyond the superficies or open part.

To look into letters already opened or dropt is held an ungenerous act.

4. Noting inclusion real or figurative.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words.

5. Noting a new state to which any thing is brought by the agency of a cause.

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire.

A man must sin himself into a love of other men's sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate, When the mad people rise against the state,

To look them into duty; and command An awful silence with thy lifted hand.

It concerns every man that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mafs.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author: and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue?

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Lat. intolerable French.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize, Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;

Eyes that confest'd him born for kingly sway, So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes is to a court lady.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode, Intolerable day proclaim'd the God.

2. Bad beyond sufferance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

To INTOMB. v. a. [in and tomb.] To inclose in a funeral monument; to bury.

What commandment had the Jews for the ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead, after which custom notwithstanding our Lord was contented contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd? Hooker.

Is't nights predominance or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb? Shak.

Mighty heroes more majestic shades,
And youths intomb'd before their father's eyes. Dry.

To INTONATE. v. a. [intono, Lat.] To thunder. Dict.

INTONATION. n. f. [intonation, Fr. from intonate.] The act of thundering. Dict.

To INTONE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from intone, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.
So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to asf Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad.

To INTO'RT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.
The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the blood, called animal spirits: and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intort'd and wound up together. Arbutnot.

With rev'rent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intort'd horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man drinketh of the world, the more it intoxicateth; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient mule,
That strong Circean liquor cease t'infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Den.

What part of wild fury was there in the bacchanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots? Decay of Pity.

Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicare.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Bacon.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. Soutb.

INTRA'CTABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, Fr.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

2. Unmanageable; furious.

By what means serpents, and other noxious and more intractable kinds, as well as the more innocent and useful, got together. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

INTRA'CTABLENESS. n. f. [from intractable.]

Obstinacy; perverseness.

INTRA'CTABLY. adv. [from intractable.] Unmanageably; stubbornly.

INTRANQUILITY. n. f. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pains, and to relieve that intranquility which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRANSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Lat.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object; as, curro, I run.

INTRAMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.]

Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intramutable, and therefore call it liquor aeternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observed, a man may prophesy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things

As yet not come to life, which in their feeds
And weak beginnings he intreasured. Shakespeare.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.] To invade; to encroach; to cut of part of what belongs to another; with on.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To fortify with a trench: as the allies were intrenched in their camp.

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which has passed through it. Hammer, I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher, to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be wounded; indivisible.

As easy may'st thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle

Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, Fr.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling.

Gulliver's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involution; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies, by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Addison.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Lat.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His stile was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Addison.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricately, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigrees, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Camden.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Sidney.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, Fr.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man,

These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flammar.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison's Guard.

The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue,
And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves cannot give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem: artful involution of feigned transaction.

As caufes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greatest part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRIGUINGLY. adv. [from intrigue.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinsicus, Fr. This word is now generally written intrinsiccal, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsiccal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctance and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsiccal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsiccal society with sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsiccal with him, or at least admitted to his melancholy hours. Wotton.

INTRINSECALLY. adv. [from intrinsiccal.]

1. Internally; naturally; really.

A lye is a thing absolutely and intrinsically evil. South.

Every one of his pieces is an ingot of gold, intrinsically and solidly valuable. Prior.

2. Within; at the inside.

In his countenance no open alteration; but the less he shewed without, the more it wrought intrinsically. Wotton.

If once bereaved of motion, matter cannot of itself acquire it again; nor till it be thrust by some other body from without, or intrinsically moved by an immaterial self-active substance that can pervade it. Bentley.

INTRINSICK. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat.]

1. Inward; internal; real; true.

Intrinsiccal goodness consists in accordance, and fin in contrariety to the secret will of God, as well as to his revealed. Hammond's Fundamentals.

2. Not depending on accident; fixed in the nature of the thing.

VOL. I. N^o 24. 6 B The

The difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is, a man's intrinsic; this, his current value. Grew.

His fame, like gold, the more 'tis try'd
The more shall its intrinsic worth proclaim. Prior.

Beautiful as a jewel set in gold, which, though it adds little to intrinsic value, yet improves the lustre, and attracts the eyes of the beholder. Rog.

INTRINSECATÉ. adj. [This word seems to have been ignorantly formed between intricate and intrinsic.] Perplexed; entangled. Not in use.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intrinsecate t' unloose. Shaksp. King Lear.

Come, mortal wretch,
With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsecate
Of life at once untie. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

TO INTRODUCE. v. a. [introducere, Lat. introducere, Fr.]

1. To conduct or usher into a place, or to a person.

Mathematicians of advanced speculations may have other ways to introduce into their minds ideas of infinity. Locke.

2. To bring something into notice or practice.
This vulgar error whosoever is able to reclaim,
he shall introduce a new way of cure, preserving by theory as well as practice. Brown's Vulg. Err.

An author who should introduce a sort of words upon the stage, would meet with small applause. Broom.

3. To produce; to give occasion to.

Whatever introduces habits in children, deserves the care and attention of their governors. Locke.

4. To bring into writing or discourse by proper preparatives.

If he will introduce himself by prefaces, we cannot help it. Layser's Trial.

INTRODUCER. n. f. [introducitur, Fr. from introduce.]

1. One who conducts another to a place or person.

2. Any one who brings any thing into practice or notice.

The beginning of the earl of Essex I must attribute to my lord of Leicester; but yet as an introducer or supporter, not as a teacher. Watson.

It is commonly charged upon the army, that the beastly vice of drinking to excess hath been lately, from their example, restored among us; but whoever the introducers were, they have succeeded to a miracle. Swift.

INTRODUCTION. n. f. [introduction, Fr. introduction, Lat.]

1. The act of conducting or ushering to any place or person; the state of being ushered or conducted.

2. The act of bringing any new thing into notice or practice.

The archbishop of Canterbury had pursued the introduction of the liturgy and the canons into Scotland with great vehemence. Clarendon.

3. The preface or part of a book containing previous matter.

INTRODUCTIVE. adj. [introdutif, Fr. from introduce.] Serving as the means to something else.

The truth of Christ crucified, is the Christian's philosophy, and a good life is the Christian's logic; that great instrumental introdutive art, that must guide the mind into the former. South.

INTRODUCTORY. adj. from introducere, Lat.] Previous; serving as a means to something further.

This introdutory discourse itself is to be but an essay, not a book. Boyle.

INTROGRESSION. n. f. [introgressio, Lat.] Entrance; the act of entering.

INTROIT. n. f. [introit, Fr.] The beginning of the mass; the beginning of public devotions.

INTROMISSION. n. f. [intromissio, Lat.]

1. The act of sending in.

If fight be caused by intromission, or receiving in the form of that which is seen, contrary species or forms should be received confusedly together, which Aristotle shews to be absurd. Peacock.

All the reason that I could ever hear alledged by the chief factors for a general intromission of all sects and persuasions into our communion, is, that those who separate from us are stiff and obstinate, and will not submit to the rules of our church, and that therefore they should be taken away. South.

2. [In the Scottish law.] The act of intermeddling with another's effects; as, he shall be brought to an account for his intromissions with such an estate.

TO INTROMIT. v. a. [intromitto, Lat.]

1. To send in; to let in; to admit.

2. To allow to enter; to be the medium by which any thing enters.

Glass in the window intromits light without cold to those in the room. Holder's Elements of Speech.

TO INTROSPECT. v. a. [introspectus, Lat.] To take a view of the inside.

INTROSPECTION. n. f. [from introspect.] A view of the inside.

The actings of the mind or imagination itself, by way of reflection or introspection of themselves, are discernable by man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

I was forced to make an introspection into my own mind, and into that idea of beauty which I have formed in my own imagination. Dryden.

INTROVNIENT. adj. [intro and venio, Latin.] Entering; coming in.

Scarce any condition which is not exhausted and obscured, from the commixture of introvenient nations, either by commerce or conquest. Brown.

TO INTRUDE. v. n. [intrudo, Lat.]

1. To come in unwelcome by a kind of violence; to enter without invitation or permission.

Thy years want wit, thy wit wants edge
And manners, to intrude where I am grac'd. Shak.

The Jewish religion was yet in possession; and therefore that this might so enter, as not to intrude, it was to bring its warrant from the same hand of omnipotence. South.

2. It is followed by on before persons, or personal possessions.

Forgive me, fair one, if officious friendship
Intrudes on your repose, and comes thus late

To greet you with the tidings of success. Rowe.

Some thoughts arise and intrude upon us, while we shun them; others fly from us, when we would hold them. Watts.

2. To encroach; to force in uncalled or unpermitted: sometimes with into.

Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility, and worshipping of angels, intruding into those things which he hath not seen by his fleshly mind. Col. ii. 18.

TO INTRUDE. v. a. To force without right or welcome; commonly with the reciprocal pronoun.

Not to intrude one's self into the mysteries of government, which the prince keep secret, is represented by the winds shut up in a bull hide, which the companions of Ulysses would needs be so foolish as to pry into. Pope.

INTRUDER. n. f. [from intrude.] One who forces himself into company or affairs without right or welcome.

Unmannerly intruder as thou art! Shakespeare.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!

Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shaksp.

They were but intruders upon the possession, during the minority of the heir: they knew those lands were the rightful inheritance of that young lady. Davies on Ireland.

Will you, a bold intruder, never learn
To know your basket, and your bread discern? Dry.

She had seen a great variety of faces: they were all strangers and intruders, such as she had no acquaintance with. Locke.

The whole fraternity of writers rise up in arms against every new intruder into the world of fame.

Addison's Freeholder.

INTRUSION. n. f. [intrusion, Fr. intrusio, Lat.]

1. The act of thrusting or forcing any thing or person into any place or state.

Many excellent strains have been justified off by the intrusions of poetical fictions. Brown's Vul. Err.

The separation of the parts of one body, upon the intrusion of another, and the change from rest to motion upon impulse, and the like, seem to have some connection. Locke.

2. Encroachment upon any person or place; unwelcome entrance; entrance without invitation or permission.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something emboldened me to this unseasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, all ways do lie open. Shakespeare.

Frogs, lice, and flies, must all his palace fill With loath'd intrusion. Milton's Paradise Lost.

How's this, my son? Why this intrusion?
Were not my orders that I should be private.

I may close, after so long an intrusion upon your meditations. Wake's Preparation for Death.

3. Voluntary and uncalled undertaking of any thing.

It will be said, I handle an art no way suitable either to my employment or fortune, and so stand charged with intrusion and impertinency. Watson.

TO INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryd. Jew.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword in Rome's defence, intrusted to our care?

He compos'd his billet-doux, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confidant. Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intueor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing, used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our rate of judging, St. Paul had pass'd for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God saw he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge or cause is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the causality itself is infensible. Glauville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Lat. intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement or disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lofty flights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstruse notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith, beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of ghostly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth set them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives Discursive or intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivemēt, Fr.] Without out deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is found and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, faving only the searcher of all mens hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps.

INTUMESCENCE. } n. f. [intumescence, French; intumescency. } intumescio, Lat.] Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terreous parts at the bottom, as they are more hardly or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescencies.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake.

INTERGUESCENCE. n. f. [in and tergescio, Lat.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but interguescencies caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them.

INTUSSE. n. f. [intus, Lat.] Bruise.

She did search the swelling bruze, And having search'd the intus deep, She bound it with her scarf.

To INTWINE. v. a. [in and twine.]

1. To twist or wreath together. This opinion, though false, yet intwined with a true, that the souls of men do never perish, abated the fear of death in them.

2. To be intwined by being wreathed or twined. The vest and veil divine, Which wand'ring foliage and rich flow'rs intwine.

To INVADE. v. a. [invado, Latin.]

1. To attack a country; to make an hostile entrance.

He will invade them with troops. Should he invade any part of their country, he would soon see that nation up in arms.

With dang'rous expedition they invade Heaven, whose high walls fear no assault. Thy race in times to come Shall spread the conquests of imperial Rome; Rome, whose ascending tow'rs shall heav'n invade, Involving earth and ocean in her shade.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy.

In vain did nature's wife command Divide the waters from the land, If daring ships, and men prophane, Invade th' inviolable main.

2. To attack; to fail; to assault. There shall be fedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm

Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee: But where the greater malady is fix'd, The lesser is scarce felt.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend. Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;

And virtue may repel, though not invade. 1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland.

Their piety In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders.

That knowledge, like the coal from the altar, serves only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders.

Were he lost, the naked empire Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders.

The country about Attica was the most barren of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand; Nor dread the bold invader's hand.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join, To call the fair invader in; My darling favourite inclination, too,

All, all conspiring with the foe. 2. An assailant. 3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that uncompounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders.

INVALESCENCE. n. f. [invalesco, Lat.] Strength; health; force.

INVALID. adj. [invalid, Fr. invalidus, Lat.] Weak; of no weight or cogency.

But this I urge, Admitting motion in the heav'ns, to shew Invalid, that which thee to doubt it mov'd.

To INVALIDATE. v. a. [from invalid.] To weaken; to deprive of force or efficacy.

To invalidate such a consequence, some things might be speciously enough alledged. Tell a man, passionately in love, that he is jilted, bring a score of witnesses of the falsehood of his mistres, and it is ten to one but three kind words of her's shall invalidate all their testimonies.

INVALID. n. f. [Fr.] One disabled by sickness or hurt.

What beggar in the invalides, With lameness broke, with bliadness smitten, With'd ever decently to die?

INVALIDITY. n. f. [in and validity; invalidité, Fr.]

1. Weakness; want of cogency. 2. Want of bodily strength. This is no English meaning.

He ordered, that none who could work should be idle; and that none who could not work, by age, sickness, or invalidity, should want.

INVALUABLE. adj. [in and valuable.] Precious above estimation; inestimable.

The faith produced by terror would not be so free an act as it ought, to which are annexed all the glorious and invaluable privileges of believing.

INVARIABLE. adj. [in and varius, Lat. invariable, Fr.] Unchangeable; constant.

Being not able to design time by days, months, or years, they thought best to determine these alterations by some known and invariable signs, and such did they conceive the rising and setting of the fixed stars.

The rule of good and evil would not appear uniform and invariable, but different, according to mens different complexions and inclinations.

INVARIABleness. n. f. [from invariable.] Immutability; constancy.

INVARIABLY. adv. [from invariable.] Unchangeably; constantly.

He, who steers his course invariably by this rule, takes the surest way to make all men praise him.

INVASION. n. f. [invasio, Fr. invasio, Lat.]

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment. We made an invasion upon the Cherethites.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy.

The nations of the Ausonian shore Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar, Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war.

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time till now, for one intire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes.

2. Attack of a disease. What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons.

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other mens possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country.

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands, Lessen their people, and extend their lands; By gasping nations hated and obey'd, Lords of the defarts that their swords had made.

INVECTIVE. n. f. [invektive, Fr. invectiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glofing speech do lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoveful for the exercise of Christian duty.

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the world, for an invective, 'tis almost as old as verse.

2. It is used with against. So desprate thieves, all hopeles of their lives, Breathe out invectives gainst the officers.

3. Less properly with at. Whilft we condemn others, we may indeed be in the wrong; and then all the invectives we make at their supposed errors, fall back with a rebounded force upon our own real ones.

INVECTIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Satirical; abusive.

Let him rail on; let his invective muse Have four and twenty letters to abuse.

INVECTIVELY. adv. Satirically; abusively. Thus most invectively he pierceth through

The body of the country, city, court, Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we Are meer usurpers, tyrants.

Most false Duesla, royal richly dight, That easy was to inveigle weaker fight, Was, by her wicked arts and wily skill,

Too false and strong for earthly skill or might.

Achilles hath inveigled his fool from him. Yet have they many baits and guileful spells, To inveigle and invite th' unwary sence

Of them that pass unweeting by the way. Both right able T' inveigle and draw in the rabble.

Those drops of prettiness, scatteringly sprinkled amongst the creatures, were designed to exalt our conceptions, not inveigle or detain our passions.

I leave the use of garlick to such as are inveigled into the gout by the use of too much drinking.

The inveighing a woman, before she is come to years of discretion, should be as criminal as the seducing of her before she is ten years old.

INVEIGLER. n. f. [from inveigle.] Seducer; deceiver; allurer to ill.

Being presented to the emperor for his admirable beauty, the prince clapt him up as his inveigler.
Sandys.

To INVENT. v. a. [inventer, Fr. invento, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out; to excogitate; to produce something not made before.

The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, but must be received from God himself. Spenser.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none

She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour and vain jelliment.

Woe to them that invent to themselves instruments of muck.
We may invent

With what more forcible we may offend
Our enemies.

In the motion of the bones in their articulations, a twofold liquor is prepared for the inunction of their heads; both which make up the most apt mixture, for this use, that can be invented or thought upon.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who Nature's mazy intricacies trace,
By manag'd fire and late invented eyes.

But when long time the wretches thoughts refin'd,

When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,

And that which each invented, all enjoy'd.

The ship, by help of a screw, invented by Archimedes, was launched into the water.

2. To forge; to contrive falsely; to fabricate.

I never did such things as those men have maliciously invented against me.

Here is a strange figure invented, against the plain sense of the words.

3. To feign; to make by the imagination.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave.

Hercules's meeting with Pleasure and Virtue was invented by Prodicus, who liv'd before Socrates, and in the first dawns of philosophy.

4. To light on; to meet with.

Far off he wanders what them makes so glad:
Or Bacchus' merry fruit they did invent,
Or Cybel's frantick rites have made them mad.

INVENTER. n. f. [from inventeur, Fr.]

1. One who produces something new; a deviser of something not known before.

As a translator, he was just; as an inventer, he was rich.

2. A forger.

INVENTION. n. f. [invention, French; inventio, Latin.]

1. Excogitation; the act or power of producing something new.

O for a muse of fire, that would ascend
The brightest heaven of invention!

By improving what was writ before,
Invention labours less, but judgment more.

Invention is a kind of muse, which being possessed of the other advantages common to her sisters, and being warmed by the fire of Apollo, is raised higher than the rest.

Mine is th' invention of the charming lyre;
Sweet notes and heav'nly numbers I inspire.

The chief excellence of Virgil is judgment, of Homer is invention.

2. Discovery.

Nature hath provided several glandules to separate spittle from the blood, and no less than four pair of channels to convey it into the mouth, which are of a late invention, and called ductus salivales.

3. Forgery; fiction.

We hear our bloody cousins, not confessing
Their cruel parricide, filling their hearers
With strange invention.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.]

A female that invents.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Lat.] In-

If thou can'st accuse,

Do it without invention suddenly.

5. The thing invented.

The garden, a place not fairer in natural ornaments than artificial inventions.

Th' invention all admir'd; and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd, so easy it seem'd

Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible.

INVENTIVE. adj. [inventif, Fr. from invent.]

1. Quick at contrivance; ready at expedients.

Those have the inventive heads for all purposes, and roundest tongues in all matters.

That inventive head
Her fatal image from the temple drew,
The sleeping guardians of the castle flew.

The inventive god, who never fails his part,
Inspires the wit, when once he warms the heart.

2. Having the power of excogitation or fiction.

As he had an inventive brain, so there never lived any man that believed better thereof, and of himself.

Reason, remembrance, wit, inventive art,
No nature, but immortal, can impart.

INVENTOR. n. f. [inventor, Latin.]

1. A finder out of something new. It is written likewise inventer.

We have the statue of your Columbus, that discovered the West Indies, also the inventor of ships: your Monk, that was the inventor of ordnance, and of gunpowder.

Studious they appear
Of arts that polish life; inventors rare,
Unmindful of their maker.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author and inventor, and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue?

2. A contriver; a framer. In an ill sense.

In this upshot, purposes mistook,
Fall'n on th' inventors heads.

INVENTORIALY. adv. [from inventor, whence perhaps inventorial.] In manner of an inventory.

To divide inventorially, would dizzy the arithmetic of memory.

INVENTORY. n. f. [inventaire, French; inventarium, Lat.] An account of catalogue or moveables.

I found,
Forfooth, an inventory, thus importing,
The several parcels of his plate.

The leanness that afflicts us, the object of our misery, is as an inventory to particularize their abundance: our sufferings is a gain to them.

Who'er looks,
For themselves dare not go, o'er Cheap-side books,
Shall find their wardrobe's inventory.

It were of much consequence to have such an inventory of nature, wherein, as, on the one hand, nothing should be wanting, so nothing repeated on the other.

In Persia the daughters of Eve are reckoned in the inventory of their goods and chattles; and it is usual, when a man sells a bale of silk, to tofs half a dozen women into the bargain.

To INVENTOR. v. a. [inventorior, Fr.] To register; to place in a catalogue.

I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labell'd.

A man looks on the love of his friend as one of the richest possessions: the philosopher thought friends were to be inventoried as well as goods.

INVENTRESS. n. f. [inventrice, Fr. from inventor.]

A female that invents.

The arts, with all their retinue of lesser trades, history and tradition tell us when they had their beginning; and how many of their inventors and inventresses were deified.

Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame:
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds.

INVERSE. adj. [inverse, Fr. inversus, Lat.] Inverted; reciprocal: opposed to direct. It is so called in proportion, when the fourth term is so much greater than the third, as the second is less than the first; or so much less than the third as the second is greater than the first.

Every part of matter tends to every part of matter with a force, which is always in a direct proportion of the quantity of matter; and an inverse duplicate proportion of the distance.

INVERSION. n. f. [inversion, Fr. inversio, Lat.]

1. Change of order or time, so as that the last is first, and first last.

If he speaks truth, it is upon a subtle inversion of the precept of God, to do good that evil may come of it.

'Tis just the inversion of an act of parliament; your lordship first signed it, and then it was passed among the lords and commons.

2. Change of place, so as that each takes the room of the other.

To INVERT. v. a. [invertio, Latin.]

1. To turn upside down; to place in contrary method or order to that which was before.

With fate inverted, shall I humbly woo?
And some proud prince, in wild Numidia born,
Pray to accept me, and forget my scorn!

Ask not the cause why fullen Spring
So long delays her flow'rs to bear,
And Winter storms invert the year.

Poesy and oratory omit things essential, and invert times and actions, to place every thing in the most affecting light.

2. To place the last first.

Yes every poet is a fool;
By demonstration Ned can show it:
Happy, could Ned's inverted rule
Prove every fool to be a poet.

3. To divert; to turn into another channel; to imbezzle. Instead of this convert or intervert is now commonly used.

Solyman charged him bitterly with inverting his treasures to his own private use, and having secret intelligence with his enemies.

INVERTEDLY. adv. [from inverted.] In contrary or reversed order.

Placing the forefront of the eye to the hole of the window of a darkened room, we have a pretty landscape of the objects abroad, invertedly painted on the paper, on the back of the eye.

To INVEST. v. a. [investir, Fr. investo, Latin.]

1. To dress; to clothe; to array. It has in or with before the thing superinduced or conferred.

Their gesture sad,
Invest in lank lean cheeks and war-worn coats,
Presented them unto the gazing moon,
So many horrid ghosts.

Thou with a mantle didst invest
The rising world of waters.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre;
Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make places of public resort, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses.

After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with public authority.

3. To adorn; to grace; as clothes or ornaments.

Honour must,
Not accompanied, invest him only;
But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine
On all deserters.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd
The kanker'd heaps of strong achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises.

Some great-potentate,
Or of the thrones above; such majesty
Invests him coming.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it investeth a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.] Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plaforms or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.] To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

TO INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigo, Latin.] To search out: to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Hold. on Speech.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

INVESTIGATION. n. f. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought investigation calm, whose silent powers

Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

Your travels I hear much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope to Swift.

INVESTITURE. n. f. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishops, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Raleigh's Essays.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. f. [in and vestment.] Drefs; cloaths; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,

Not of that die which their investments shew. Shak.

You, my lord archbishop,

Whose fee is by a civil peace maintained,

Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,

Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,

Whose white investments figure innocence,

The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;

Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself

Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,

Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war? Shak.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them. Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Latin.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of Christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bind all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of Scripture; to the contrary. Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantharides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that at length produces and ends in such a curd effect. South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease. Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies. Swift.

TO INVE'TERATE. v. a. [invetero, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into mens minds. Bacon.

Let not Atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit. Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in that art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution. Brown's V. E.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words. Locke.

INVE'TERATION. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious reserve. Evelyn.

2. Likely to incur or bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes. Broome

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals. Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy. Spratt.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

TO INVI'GORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.] To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate. Brown.

Gentle warmth

Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,

Invigorating tender feeds. Philips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them. Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a light-some and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action. Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity. Atterbury.

INVI'GORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration. Novis.

INVIN'CIBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invincibilis, Latin.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection. Shak.peare.

Should he invade their country, he would soon

see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms. Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible. Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment. Locke.

If an Atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch. Bentley.

INVIN'CIBLE. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVIN'CIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause; And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done

Invincibly. Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit. Decay of Piety.

INVI'OLABLE. adj. [inviolable, French; inviolabilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep

This place inviolable. Milton.

In vain did Nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invade th' inviolable main;

Th' eternal fences overleap,

And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high

His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!

Inviolable powers! ador'd with dread,

Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Æneid.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and inviolable. Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of inviolable amity. Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,

As if they vow'd some league inviolable. Shaksp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' inviolable fairs

In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire. Milton.

INVI'OLABLY. adv. [from inviolable.] Without breach; without failure.

Mere acquaintance you have none: you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after inviolably yours. Dryden.

The true profession of Christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Spratt.

INVI'OLATE. adj. [inviolate, Fr. involutus, Lat.]

Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still inviolate. Bacon.

But let inviolate truth be always dear

To thee; even before friendship, truth prefer. Denham.

If the past

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds

Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I

Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd inviolate:

I beg thy pardon. Denham's Sophy.

My love your claim inviolate secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours. Dryden.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,

His truth, like Heav'n's, was kept inviolate. Dryden.

INVI'OUS. adj. [inivius, Latin.] Impassable; un-trodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,

And virtue inivius ways can prove,

What may not he confide to do,

That brings both love and virtue too? Hudib.

INVISIBILITY. n. f. [invisibilitas, Fr. from invisibilis.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibility to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility. Kant.

INVISIBLY.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, French; invisibilis, Latin.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurts me so;
And none invisible, but spirits, can go. Sidney.

The threaten fails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Drew the huge bottoms to the furrow'd sea. Shak.

'Tis wonderful,
That an invisible instinct should frame them
To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untaught. Shakesp.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,
In these thy lowest works. Milton.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen. Tillotson.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself. Locke.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Denham.

TO INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Latin.] To lime; to intangle in glutinous matter.

The camelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth
those insects. Brown.

INVITATION. n. f. [invitation, French; invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And soon the gracious invitation took. Dryden.

INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Latin.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

TO INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, Fr.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.
If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself. Ecclef.

He comes invited by a younger son. Milton.

When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coals. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice, Bacon.

Nor art thou such Created, or such place hast here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though spirits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Decay of Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dry.

TO INVITE. v. n. [invito, Lat.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful counsels. Milton.

INVITER. n. f. [from invito.] He who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied. K. Cha.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Smalbridge's Sermons.

Wines and cates the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope's Od.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look in-vitingly, the business is done. Decay of Piety.

TO INUMBERATE. v. a. [inumbro, Lat.] To shade;
to cover with shades. Pict.

INUCTION. n. f. [inungo, inuinctus, Lat.] The act of smearing or anointing.

The wife Author of Nature hath placed on the rump two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge.
Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That she should give her sorrow so much sway;
And in his wisdom hastes our marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakespeare.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in most places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, 'till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This inundation unto the Egyptians happeneth when it is Winter unto the Ethiopians. Br. Vul. Er.

Your care about your banks infers a fear,
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.
Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly wasted. Spenser.

TO INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Poor clay-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invocate thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shaksp.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invocate his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton's Agonistes.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the draft of servile food
Consume me, and oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.
Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or preference of any being.

My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress's name. Shaksp.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line,
and that of invocation in half a line. Waller.

I will strain myself to breath out this one invocation. Howell.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addis.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyer, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [invoco, Latin; involvere, Fr.]
To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invo-cate.

The power I will involve dwells in her eyes. Sid.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest, of whom to be invok'd. Milton.

The skilful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [involvere, Latin.]

1. To enwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

Leave a sing'd bottom all involv'd
With stench and smoke. Milton.

No man could mis his way to heaven for want of light; and yet so vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Decay of Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.
We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tillotson.

3. To entwine; to join.
He knows his end with mine involv'd. Milton.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.

The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

Sin we should hate altogether; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Sparr.

One death involves Tyrants and slaves. Thomson's Summer.

5. To entangle.
This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.
Some involv'd their snaky folds. Milton.

Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.
Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius,
Latin; involontaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.
The gath'ring number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confests. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.
The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutio, Latin.]

mutual involutions. Glanville's Sciaph.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how, sometimes found about the heads of children. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO INVOLVE. v. a. [in and ure.] To habituate;
to make ready or willing by practice and custom;
to accustom. It had anciently with before the thing practised, now to.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little involve their ears with hearing others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the self-same language with us. Hooker.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much difference, in maturity of judgment, between men therewith involved, and that which now men are, as between men that are now and innocents. Hooker.

That it may no painful work endure,
It to strong labour can itself involve. Hubbard's Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately involved to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser.

The forward hand, involv'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Dan.

Then cruel, by their sports to blood involv'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton.

IN'UTILITY. n. f. [inutilité, Fr. inutilitas, Lat.] Uselessness; unprofitableness.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerable, Fr. invulnerabilis, Latin.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shak.

Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton.

Vaneffa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,

Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

To INW'ALL. v. a. [in and wall.] To inclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garrisons, would be so augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly. Spencer.

INWARD. } adv. [in and ward, Saxon.]

INWARDS. } 1. Towards the internal parts; within.

The parts of living creatures that be more inwards, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inwards they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwards. Bacon.

2. With inflexion or incurvity; concavely.

He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Looking inward we are stricken dumb; looking upward we speak and prevail. Hooker.

Celestial light
Shine inwards, and the soul through all her pow'rs Irradiate. Milton.

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside, but within.

He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waste his inward gall with deep dequight. Fairy Queen.

To each inward part

It shoots invisible. Milton.

Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the shaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.

With outward smiles their flatt'ry I receiv'd;
But bent and inward to myself again

Perplex'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestic; familiar.

Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and absolute a privilege. Spenser.

All my inward friends abhorred me. Job, xix. 19.

4. Seated in the mind.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakesp.

INWARD. n. f.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels.

Seldom has this sense a singular.

Then sacrificing, laid
The inwards, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mort.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.

Sir, I was an inward of his; a fly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakespeare.

INWARDLY. adv. [from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.

That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. Hooker.

I bleed inwardly for my lord. Shakespeare.

Mean time the king, though inwardly he mourn'd,
In pomp triumphant to the town return'd,
Attended by the chiefs. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

2. In the parts within; internally.

Let Benedick, like cover'd fire,
Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly. Shakesp.

Cantharides he prescribes both outwardly and inwardly. Arbutnot.

the ladies lost the marking his sportfulness. Sidney.

To INWRAP. v. a. [in and wrap.]

1. To cover by involution; to involve.

And over them Arachne high did lift
Her cunning web, and spread her subtil net, Inwrapped in foul smoak. Fairy Queen.

This, as an amber drop inwraps a bee,
Covering discovers your quick soul; that we May in your through-shine front our hearts thoughts see. Donne.

2. To perplex; to puzzle with difficulty or obscurity.

The case is no sooner made than resolv'd: if it be made not inwrapped, but plainly and perspicuously. Bacon.

3. It is doubtful whether the following examples should not be enrap or inrap, from in and rap, rapio, Latin, to ravish or transport.

This pearl she gave me I do feel't and see't;
And though 'tis wonder that enwraps me thus,
Yet 'tis not madfess. Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

For if such holy song
Enwrap our fancy long,

Time will run back, and fetch the age of gold. Milton.

INWROUGHT. adj. [in and wrought.] Adorned with work.

Camus, reverend sir, went footing slow,
His mantle hairy and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flower inscrib'd with woe. Milton.

To INWREATH. v. a. [in and wreath.] To surround as with a wreath.

Bind their resplendent locks inwreath'd with beams. Milton.

Nor less the palm of peace inwreathes thy brow. Thomson.

As an ass with a galled back was feeding in a meadow, a raven pitched upon him, and sat jobbing of the fore. L'Estrange.

2. To drive in a sharp instrument.

Let peacock and turkey leave jobbing their bex. Tusser.

The work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, draw or job the edge into the stuff. Maxon.

To JOB. v. n. To play the stockjobber; to buy and sell as a broker.

The judge shall job, the bishop bite the town,
And mighty dukes pack cards for half a crown. Pope.

JOB'S TEARS. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

JOBBER. n. f. [from job.]

1. A man who sells stock in the publick funds.

So cast it in the southern seas,
And view it through a jobber's bill;
Put on what spectacles you please,
Your guinea's but a guinea still. Swift.

2. One who does chancework.

JOBBERS' W. n. f. [most probably from jobber, Flemish, dull, and now, Pol., Saxon, a head.]
Loggerhead; blockhead.

JOCOSE. adj. [jocosus, Lat.] Merry; waggish;
given to jest.

If the subject be sacred, all ludicrous turns, and jocose or comical airs, should be excluded, lest young minds learn to trifle with the awful solemnities of religion. Watts.

JOCOSELY. adv. [from jocose.] Waggishly; in jest; in game.

Spondanus imagines that Ulysses may possibly speak jocose, but in truth Ulysses never behaves with levity. Broom.

JOCO'SENESS. } n. f. [from jocose.] Waggery;
JOCO'SITY. } merriment.

A laugh there is of contempt or indignation, as well as of mirth or jocosity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JOCULAR. adj. [jocularis, Lat.] Used in jest; merry; jocose; waggish; not serious: used both of men and things.

These jocular slanders are often as mischievous as those of the deepest design. Government of the Tong.

The satire is a dramatick poem; the stile is partly serious, and partly jocular. Dryden.

Good Vellum, don't be jocular. Addison.

JOCULARITY. n. f. [from jocular.] Merriment;
disposition to jest.

The wits of those ages were short of these of ours; when men could maintain immutable faces, and persist unalterably at the efforts of jocularity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JOCUND. adj. [jocundus, Lat.] Merry; gay;
airy; lively.

There's comfort yet; then be thou jocund. Shak.

And steer'd him gently toward the squire. Hudib.

I was pretty well pleased while I expected, till fruition *jog*ged me out of my pleasing slumber, and I knew it was but a dream. Norris.

Sudden I jog'd Ulysses, who was laid fast by my side. Pope's Odyssey.

To JOG. v. n.

1. To move by succussion; to move with small shocks like those of a low trot.

The door is open, Sir, there lies good way,

You may be jogging while your boots are green. Sh.

Here lieth one, who did most truly prove

That he could never die while he could move;

So hung his destiny, never to rot

While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milt.

2. To travel idly and heavily.

Jog on, jog on the foot-path way,

And merrily heat the stile-a,

A merry heart goes all the day,

Your sad tires in a mile-a. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

Away they trotted together: but as they were jogging on, the wolf spy'd a bare place about the dog's neck. L'Estrange.

Thus they jog on, still tricking, never thriving,

And murr'd'ring plays, which they miscall reviving. Dryden.

JOG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A push; a slight shake; a sudden interruption by a push or shake; a hint given by a push.

As a leopard was valuing himself upon his party-coloured skin, a fox gave him a jog, and whispered, that the beauty of the mind was above that of a painted outside. L'Estrange.

JO'INTURE. n. f. [jointure, Fr.] Estate settled on a wife to be enjoyed after her husband's decease.

The jointure that your king must make,

With her dow'ry shall be counterpois'd. Shak.

The old countess of Desmond, who lived in 1589,

1589, and many years since, was married in Edward the Fourth's time, and held her jointure from all the earls of Desmond since then. Raleigh.

There's a civil question us'd of late,
Where lies my jointure, where your own estate? Dryden.

What's property? You see it alter,
Or, in a mortgage, prove a lawyer's share,
Or, in a jointure, vanish from the heir. Pope.

JOINT. n. f. [from joindre, Fr.] The secondary beam of a floor.

Some wood is not good to use for beams or joists, because of the brittleness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The kettle to the top was hoist,
And there stood fastened to a joist. Swift.

To JOIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit in the smaller beams of a flooring.

JOKER. n. f. [jocus, Lat.] A jest; something not serious.

Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
Inclose whole downs in walls, 'tis all a joke! Inexorable death shall level all. Pope.

Why should publick mockery in print, or a merry joke upon a stage, be a better test of truth than publick perfections? Watts on the Mind.

To JOKE. v. n. [jocor, Lat.] To jest; to be merry in words or actions.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of ashes, leather, oat-meal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

JOKER. n. f. [from joke.] A jester; a merry fellow.

Thou mad'st thy first appearance in the world like a dry joker, buffoon, or jack-pudding. Dennis.

JOKE. n. f. [guele, Fr. crol, Saxon.] 1. The face or cheek. It is seldom used but in the phrase cheek by jole.

Follow! nay, I'll go with thee cheek by jole, Shakespeare.

And by him in another hole.
Afflicted Ralpho, cheek by jole. Hudibras.

Your wan complexion, and your thin joles, father. Dryden.

A man, who has digested all the fathers, lets a pure English divine go cheek by jole with him. Collier on Pride

2. The head of a fish.

A falcon's belly, Helluo, was thy fate;
The doctor call'd, declares all help too late:
Mercy! cries Helluo, mercy on my soul!

Is there no hope? alas; then bring the jowl. Pope.

Red-speckled trows, the falcon's silver jole,
The jointed lobster, and unfaily foale, Gay's Triv.

To JOLL. v. a. [from joll, the head.] To beat the head against any thing; to clash with violence.

Howsoever their hearts are sever'd in religion,
Their heads are both one: they may joll horns together. Shakespeare.

The tortoisies envied the easiness of the frogs,
'till they saw them joll'd to pieces and devoured for want of a buckler. L'Estrange.

JO'LILY. adv. [from jolly.] In a disposition to noisy mirth.

The goodly empress, jollily inclin'd,
Is to the welcome bearer wond'rous kind. Dryd.

JO'LLEMENT. n. f. [from jolly.] Mirth; merriment; gaiety. Obsolete.

Matter of mirth enough, though there were none,
She could devise, and thousand ways invent
To feed her foolish humour, and vain jolliment. Fairy Queen.

JO'LLINESS. } n. f. [from jolly.]
JO'LLITY. }

1. Gaiety; elevation of spirit.

He with a proud jollity commanded him to leave that quarrel only for him, who was only worthy to enter into it. Sidney.

2. Merriment; festivity.

With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.

There shall these pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Thebeus, all in jollity. Shakespeare.

The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.

Good men are never so surpris'd as in the midst of their jollities, nor so fatally overtaken and caught as when the table is made the snare. South.

With branches we the fanes adorn and waste
In jollity the day ordain'd to be the last. Dryden.

My heart was filled with melancholy to see several dropping in the midst of mirth and jollity. Addison's Spectator.

JO'LLY. adj. [joli, Fr. jovalis, Lat.] 1. Gay; merry; airy; cheerful; lively; jovial.

Like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come Our lusty English. Shakespeare's King John.

O nightingale!
Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart do'st fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May. Milton.

All my griefs to this are jolly,
Nought so sad as melancholy. Burton.

Ev'n ghosts had learn'd to groan;
But free from punishment, as free from sin,
The shades liv'd jolly, and without a king. Dryd.

This gentle knight, inspir'd by jolly May,
Forfook his easy couch at early day. Dryden.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves,
And with his jolly pipe delights the groves. Prior.

2. Plump; like one in high health.

He catches at an apple of Sodom, which though it may entertain his eye with a florrid, jolly white and red, yet, upon the touch, it shall fill his hand only with stench and foulness. South.

To JOLT. v. n. [I know not whence derived.] To shake as a carriage on rough ground.

Every little unevenness of the ground will cause such a joling of the chariot as to hinder the motion of its sails. Wilkins.

Violent motion, as jolting in a coach, may be used in this case. Arbuthnot on Diet.

A coach and six horses is the utmost exercise you can bear, and how glad would you be, if it could wait you in the air to avoid jolting! Swift.

To JOLT. v. a. To shake one as a carriage does.

JO'LT. n. f. [from the verb.] Shock; violent agitation.

The symptoms are, bloody water upon a sudden jolt or violent motion. Arbuthnot on Diet.

The first jolt had like to have shaken me out;
but afterwards the motion was easy. Swift.

JO'LT HEAD. n. f. [I know not whence derived.] A great head; a dolt; a blockhead.

Fie on thee, jolt-head, thou can'st not read! Shakespeare.

Had man been a dwarf, he had scarce been a reasonable creature; for he must then have either had a jolt-head, and so there would not have been body and blood enough to supply his brain with spirits; or he must have had a small head, and so there would not have been brain enough for his business. Greav.

JO'QUILLE. n. f. [jonquille, Fr.] A species of daffodil. The flowers of this plant are greatly esteemed for their strong sweet scent. Miller.

Nor gradual bloom is wanting,
Nor hyacinths of purest virgin white,
Low bent and blushing inward; nor jonquilles
Of potent fragrance. Thomson's Spring.

JO'RDEN. n. f. [Jordan, stercus, and den, receptaculum.] A pot.

They will allow us ne'er a jorden, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamberlye breeds fleas like a loach. Shakespeare.

This China jorden let the chief o'ercome
Replenish, not ingloriously at home. Pope's Dun.

The copper-pot can boil milk, heat porridge, hold small-beer, or, in case of necessity, serve for a jorden. Swift.

JO'SEPH'S Flowers. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

To JO'STLE. v. a. [jouster, Fr.] To juggle; to rush against.

JOT. n. f. [ωτ, Gr.] A point; a tittle; the least quantity assignable.

As superfluous flesh did rot,
Amendment ready still at hand did wait,
To pluck it out with pincers fiery hot,
That soon in him was left no one corrupt jot. Fairy Queen.

Go, Eros, send his treasure after, do it;
Detain no jot, I charge thee. Shaksp. Ant. & Cl.

Let me not stay a jot from dinner; go, get it ready. Shakespeare.

This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot;
Forbear it therefore; give your cause to Heaven. Shakespeare.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are a pound of flesh. Shak.

I argue not Against Heaven's hand, or will; nor bate one jot
Of heart or hope; but still bear up and steer Right onwards. Milton.

You might, with every jot, as much justice, hang me up because I'm old, as beat me because I'm impotent. L'Estrange.

A man may read the discourses of a very rational author, and yet acquire not one jot of knowledge. Locke.

The final event will not be one jot less the consequence of our own choice and actions, for God's having from all eternity foreseen and determined what that event shall be. Rogers.

JO'VIAL. adj. [jovalis, Fr. jovalis, Lat.] 1. Under the influence of Jupiter.

The fixed stars are astrologically differenced by the planets, and are esteemed martial or jovial, according to the colours whereby they answer these planets. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

2. Gay; airy; merry.

My lord, seek o'er your rugged looks,
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests. Shakespeare.

Our jovial star reign'd at his birth. Shakespeare.

Some men, of an ill and melancholy nature, incline the company, into which they come, to be sad and ill-disposed; and contrariwise, others of a jovial nature dispose the company to be merry and cheerful. Bacon's Natural History.

His odes are some of them panegyric, others moral, the rest jovial or bacchanalian. Dryden.

Perhaps the jest that charm'd the sprightly crowd,
And made the jovial table laugh so loud,
To some false notion ow'd its poor pretence. Prior.

JO'VIALLY. adv. [from jovial.] Merrily; gaily.

JO'VIALNESS. n. f. [from jovial.] Gaiety; merriment.

JO'UISANCE. n. f. [rejoissance, Fr.] Jollity; merriment; festivity. Obsolete.

Colin, my dear, when shall it please thee sing,
As thou wert wont, songs of some joysance? Thy muse too long lumbereth in forrowing, Lulled asleep through love's misgovernance. Spenser.

JO'URNAL. adj. [journalis, Fr. giornale, Italian.] Daily; quotidian. Out of use.

Now 'gan the golden Phebus for to steep
His fiery face in billows of the west,
And his faint steeds water'd in ocean deep,
Whilst from their journal labours they did rest. Fairy Queen.

Ere twice the sun has made his journal greeting
To th' under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Stick to your journal course; the breach of custom
Is breach of all. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

JO'URNAL. n. f. [journal, Fr. giornale, Italian.] 1. A diary; an account kept of daily transactions.

Edward kept a most judicious journal of all the principal passages of the affairs of his estate. Hayw.

Time has destroyed two noble journals of the navigation of Hanno and of Hamilcar. Arbuthnot.

JO'URNALIST. n. f. [from journal.] A writer of journals.

JO'URNEY. n. f. [journee, Fr.] 1. The travel of a day.

When Duncan is asleep,
Whereto the rather shall this day's hard journey
Soundly invite him. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey. Milton.

2. Travel by land; distinguished from a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy,
In general journey bated and brought low. Shak.

Before

JOY

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare
The smooth-hair horses and the rapid car. Pope.
3. Passage from place to place.
Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet's Theory.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year,
Still as thou do'st thy radiant journey run
Through every distant climate, own,
That in fair Albion thou hast seen
The greatest prince, the brightest queen. Prior.
To JOURNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem
Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakespeare.
We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Numbers.

Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill;
Not panting after growing beauties, so I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.
I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open. Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud
Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night,
Save when they journey. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wiseman's Surgery.

JOURNEYMAN. n. f. [journé, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute it be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Coruel.
Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of Nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakespeare's Ham.
I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journeymen under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Addison.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the business into his hands: we must starve or turn journeyman to old Lewis Baboon. Arbutnot's J. Bull.
JOURNEYWORK. n. f. [journé, French, and work.] Work performed for hire; work done by the day.

Did no committee sit, where he Might cut out journeywork for thee?
And set thee a task with subordination,
To sit up late and sequestration? Hudibras.

Her family she was forced to hire out at journeywork to her neighbours. Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

JOUST. n. f. [joust, Fr.] Tilt; tournament; mock fight. It is now written less properly joust. Bases, and tinsel trappings, gorgeous knights

At joust and tournament. Milton's Paradise Lost.
To JOUST. v. n. [jouster, Fr.] To run in the tilt.

All who since Joust'd in Aspramont or Mountalban. Milton.

JOULIER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from bowler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about,
Like hounds ill-coupled: jowler lugs him still Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from jowler.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Carew.

JOY. n. f. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakespeare.

JOY

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. 2 Esdr.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

2. Gaiety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound;
And hymen, is hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shakespeare.

Come, love and health to all;
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine:
I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakespeare.

Almeyda smiling came,
Attended with a train of all her race,
Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd;
But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy
Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride,
Lovely herself, and lovely by her side,
A bevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace,
Came glitt'ring like a star, and took her place:
Her heav'nly form beheld, all wish'd her joy;
And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy,
Although our last, yet not our least young love,
What say you? Shakespeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits,
And mask in mirth like to a comedy;
Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits,
I will make my woes a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant father is become. Shakel.

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph. iii. 17.
I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Habb. iii. 18.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus, because his spirit was refreshed by you. 2 Cor. vii. 13.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we lament. Fairfax.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but he joyeth the more; and no man imparteth his griefs, but he grieveth the less. Bacon's Essays.

Well then, my soul, joy in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love. Wotton.

JOY thou,

In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And thy fair Eve. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Their cheerful age with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free. Denham.

To JOY. v. a.

1. To congratulate; to entertain kindly.

Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend, or grapple with the foe. Prior.

2. To gladden; to exhilarate.

She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.

My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main. Pope.

3. [Joire, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession of.

Let us hence,
And let her joy her raven-colour'd love. Shakespeare.

I might have liv'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milt.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

JOYANCE. n. f. [joiant, old French.] Gaiety; festivity. Obsolete.

Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.

JOY

There him rests in riotous suffiance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser.

JOYFUL. adj. [joy and full.]

1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went unto their tents joyful and glad of heart. 1 King.

My soul shall be joyful in my God. Isa. lxi. 10.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

Six brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope's Od.

JOYFULLY. adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu. Shakespeare Henry V.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to flee:
With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the states stood by. Dryden.

The good Christian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, through this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Wake.

JOYFULNESS. n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou servedst not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JOYLESS. adj. [from joy.]

1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joyless. Shak. R. III.

With down-cast eyes the joyless victor sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below;
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden's Alex. Paoli.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He looks and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forfeats his food, and, pining for the last,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurns the growing grafs. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.

A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is the babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shakespeare.

Here Love his golden shafts employs; here lights

His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smile
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Piety.

He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless to him. Addison.

JOYOUS. adj. [joyeux, Fr.]

1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my falser friend did no less joyous deem. Fairy Queen.

Joyous the birds; fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature stung, renew their love. Dryden.

Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas, Fav'rites of Heav'n, with happy care protect Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave. Prior.

2. Giving joy.

They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
Thence led her forth, about her dancing round. Fairy Queen.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.

Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won; Whit.

While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and with it theirs.

Dryden.

IPECACUANHA. n. f. [An Indian plant.]

Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru: the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly. Hill's Mat. Med.

IRASCIBLE. adj. [irascibilis, low Lat. irascibilis, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions the crisis of the liver. Brown.

I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbutnot on Alim.

We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Digby to Pope.

IRE. [Fr. ira, Lat. Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;

Fain would be free, but dreaded parents ire. Sidney.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It could not flake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Shakespeare Henry IV.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.

The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her fire. Dryden.

IRIS. adj. [ire and full.] Angry; raging; furious.

The ireful bastard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon encounter'd. Shakespeare.

By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelented Clifford. Shakespeare's Henry VI.
There learn'd this maid of arms the ireful guise. Fairfax.

In midst of all the dome misfortune fat,
And gloomy discontent, and fell debate,
And madnes laughing in his ireful mood. Dryden.

IRFULLY. adv. [from ire.] With ire; in an angry manner.

IRIS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. The rainbow.
Beside the solary iris, which God shewed unto Noah, there is another lunark, whose efficient is the moon. Brown.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr. 10'; and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green in the exterior iris, was to the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opticks.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

Iris all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.

TO IRK. v. a. [yrk, work, Islandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mibi pœne est, it gives me pain; or, I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accident say, taedet, it irks.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shakespeare.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shakespeare.

IRKSOME. adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know she is an irksome brawling scold. Shakespeare.

Since that thou can't talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakespeare's As you like it.

Where he may likeliest find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours, till his great chief return. Milt.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd. Milton.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words.

Addison's Spectator.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY. adv. [from irksome.] Wearisomely; tediously.

IRKSOMENESS. n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

IRON. n. f. [baian, Welsh; irēn, inen, Saxon; iron, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable; when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle, while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specific gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shak.

If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Nam. xxxv. 16.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates, placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron flag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Wood on Fossils.

Iron stonies in strata. Woodward on Fossils.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work. Moxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would Bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakespeare.

O thou! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye:
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shakespeare.

Can'st thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fish-spears? Job. xli. 7.

For this your locks in paper-durance bound?
For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.

The iron entered into his soul. Psalms.

His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Psalms.

IRON. adj.

1. Made of iron.

In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shakespeare.

Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shakespeare's Romeo and Juliet.

Some are of an iron red, shining, and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.

A piece of stone of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodward.

Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age, for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.

Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind,
Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crafft.

O sad virgin, that thy power

Might bid the foul of Orpheus sing
Such notes as warbled to the string,
Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek,
And made hell grant what love did seek. Milton.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers,
From blooming youth down to decaying age,
My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.

Jove crush the nations with an iron rod,
And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irraguous sleep,
Imprudent: him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.

I will converse with iron-witted fools,
And unrespective boys: none are for me,
That look into me with confederate eyes. Shakespeare.

TO IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To smooth with an iron.

2. To shackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, Fr. from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.

In this fallacy may be comprised all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.

Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wise, and knew it; and others were not wise, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave,
Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. f. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. f. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water: It grows in America. Robinson Crasoe.

IRONWORT. n. f. [sideritis, Lat.] A plant. Mill.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.

The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the irony chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the irony particles carried off, copy particles. Woodward on Fossils.

IRONY. n. f. [ironie, Fr. ironia.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the word: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRADIANCE. n. f. [irradiance, French; irradiance, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any subject.

The principal affection is its translucency; the irradiance and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Beams of light emitted.

Love not the heav'nly spirits? Or do they mix Irradiance, virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

TO IRRADIATE. v. a. [irradia, Latin.]

1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanos, to be every where mingled with light. Digby on Bodies.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten; to illumine; to illuminate.
Celestial light

Shine inward, and the mind through all her pow'rs Irradiate; there plant eyes: all mist from thence Purge and disperse. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To animate by heat or light.
Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.
No weeping orphan saw his father's store
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floor. Pope.

IRRADIATION, n. f. [irradiation, Fr. from irra-diare.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.
If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body, wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found.
Digby on Bodies.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or answerably unto the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.

The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradia-tion or revelation. Hale.

IRRATIONAL, adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]

1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discursive faculty.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first,
Daughter of sin, among th' irrational
Death introduc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

He hath eat'n and lives,
And knows, and speaks, and reasons and dis-
cerns;

Irrational till then. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.

Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application.
Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing so irrational
a thing as that every body should be deceived.
Pope.

IRRATIONALITY, n. f. [from irrational.] Want of reason.

IRRA'TIONALLY, adv. [from irrational.] Without reason; absurdly.

IRRECLAIMABLE, adj. [in and reclaimable.]
Not to be reclaimed; not to be changed to the better.

As for obstinate, irreclaimable, professed enemies, we must expect their calumnies will continue. Addison's Freeholder.

IRRECONCILABLE, adj. [irreconcilable, Fr. in and reconcilable.]

1. Not to be recalled to kindness; not to be appeased.

Wage eternal war,
Irreconcilable to our grand foe. Milton.

A weak unequal faction may animate a government; but when it grows equal in strength, and irreconcilable by animosity, it cannot end without some crisis. Temple.

There are no factions, though irreconcilable to one another, that are not united in their affection to you. Dryden.

2. Not to be made consistent: it has with or to.

As she was strictly virtuous herself, so she always put the best construction upon the words and actions of her neighbours, except where they were irreconcilable to the rules of honour and decency. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

Since the sense I oppose is attended with such gross irreconcilable absurdities, I presume I need not offer any thing farther in support of the one,
or in disproof of the other. Rogers.

This essential power of gravitation or attraction is irreconcilable with the Atheists own doctrine of a chaos. Bentley.

IRRECONCILABLENESS, n. f. [from irreconcilable.] Impossibility to be reconciled.

IRRECONCILABLY, adv. [from irreconcilable.]
In a manner not admitting reconciliation.

IRRECONCILED, adj. [in and reconciled.] Not atoned.

A servant dies in many irreconciled iniquities. Sh.

IRRECOVERABLE, adj. [in and recoverable.]

1. Not to be regained; not to be restored or repaired.

Time, in a natural sense, is irrecoverable: the moment just fled by us, it is impossible to recal.
Rogers.

2. Not to be remedied.

The irrecoverable loss of so many livings of principal value. Hooker.

It concerns every man, that would not trifle away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire.
Tillotson.

IRRECOVERABLY, adv. [from irrecoverable.]

Beyond recovery; past repair.

O dark, dark, dark amid' the blaze of noon;
Irrecoverably dark, total eclipse,

Without all hope of day. Milton's Agon.

The credit of the Exchequer is irrecoverably lost by the last breach with the bankers. Temple.

IRREDUCIBLE, adj. [in and reducible.] Not to be brought or reduced.

These observations seem to argue the corpuscles of air to be irreducible into water. Boyle.

IRREFRAGABILITY, n. f. [from irrefragable.]
Strength of argument not to be refuted.

IRREFRAGABLE, adj. [irrefragabilis, school Latin; irrefragable, Fr.] Not to be confuted; superior to argumental opposition.

Strong and irrefragable the evidences of Christianity must be: they who resisted them would resist every thing. Atterbury's Sermons.

The danger of introducing unexperienced men was urged as an irrefragable reason for working by flow degrees. Swift.

IRREFRAGABLY, adv. [from irrefragable.]
With force above confutation.

That they denied a future state is evident from St. Paul's reasonings, which are of no force but only on that supposition, as Origen largely and ir-refragably proves. Atterbury.

IRREFUTABLE, adj. [irrefutabilis, Latin.] Not to be overthrown by argument.

IRREGULAR, adj. [irregulier, Fr. irregularis,
Latin.]

1. Deviating from rule, custom, or nature.

The am'rous youth,
Obtain'd of Venus his desire,
Howe'er irregular his fire. Prior.

2. Immethodical; not confined to any certain rule or order.

This motion seems excentrique and irregular, yet not well to be resisted or quieted. K. Charles.

Regular

Then most, when most irregular they seem. Milton.

The numbers of pindariques are wild and irregular, and sometimes seem harsh and uncouth.

3. Not being according to the laws of virtue.

A soft word for vitious.

IRREGULARITY, n. f. [irregularité, Fr. from irregular.]

1. Deviation from rule.

2. Neglect of method and order.

This irregularity of its unruly and tumultuous motion might afford a beginning unto the common opinion. Brown.

As these vast heaps of mountains are thrown together with so much irregularity and confusion, they form a great variety of hollow bottoms. Addison.

3. Inordinate practice: vice.

Religion is somewhat less in danger of corruption, while the finner acknowledges the obligations of his duty, and is ashamed of his irregularities. Rogers.

IRREGULARLY, adv. [from irregular.] Without observation of rule or method.

Phaeton,
By the wild courses of his fancy drawn,
From East to West irregularly hurl'd,
First set on fire himself, and then the world.
Dryden, jnn.

Your's is a foul irregularly great,
Which wanting temper, yet abounds with heat.

It may give some light to those whose concern for their little ones makes them so irregularly bold as to consult their own reason, in the education of their children, rather than to rely upon old custom. Locke.

To IRREGULATE, v. a. [from in and regula,
Latin.] To make irregular; to disorder.

Its fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, shelves and every interjacency irregulates. Brown.

IRRE'LATIVE, adj. [in and relativus, Lat.] Having no reference to any thing; single; unconnected.

Separated by the voice of God, things in their species came out in uncommunicated varieties, and irrelative sexualities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IRRELIGION, n. f. [irreligion, Fr. in and religion.] Contempt of religion; impiety.

The weapons with which I combat irreligion are already consecrated. Dryden.

We behold every instance of prophaneness and irreligion, not only committed, but defended and gloried in. Rogers.

IRRELIGIOUS, adj. [irreligieux, Fr. in and religious.]

1. Contemning religion; impious.

The issue of an irreligious Moor. Shakespeare.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
With burthen of a sickness weak and faint,
But hears them talking of religion then,
And vowing of their souls to ev'ry faint. Davies.

Shame and reproach is generally the portion of the impious and irreligious. South.

2. Contrary to religion.

Wherein that Scripture standeth not the church of God in any stead, or ferveth nothing at all to direct, but may be let pass as needfuls to be consulted with, we judge it profane, impious, and irreligious to think. Hooker.

Might not the queen's domesticks be obliged to avoid swearing, and irreligious profane discourse?
Swift.

IRRELIGIOUSLY, adv. [from irreligious.] With impiety; with irreligion.

IRREMEABLE, adj. [irremediabilis, Latin.] Admitting no return.

The keeper charm'd, the chief without delay
Pass'd on, and took th' irremearable way. Dryden.

IRREMEDIAL, adj. [irremediabile, Fr. in and remediabile.] Admitting no cure; not to be remedied.

They content themselves with that which was the irremediable error of former times, or the necessity of the present hath cast upon them. Hooker.

A steady hand, in military affairs, is more requisite than in peace, because an error committed in war may prove irremediable. Bacon.

Whatever he consults you about, unless it lead to some fatal and irremediable mischief, be sure you advise only as a friend. Locke.

IRREMEDIABLY, adv. [from irremediable.]
Without cure.

It happens to us irremediably and inevitably, that we may perceive these accidents are not the fruits of our labour, but gifts of God.

IRREMISISSIBLE, adj. [in and remissio, Lat. irre-missibile, Fr.] Not to be pardoned.

IRREMISISSIBLENESS, n. f. [from irremissibile.]
The quality of being not to be pardoned.

Thence arises the aggravation and irremissibleness of the sin. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREMOVABLE, adj. [in and removē.] Not to be moved; not to be changed.

He is irremovable, Resolv'd for flight. Shak. Winter's Tale.

IRRENO'WNED, adj. [in and renown.] Void of honour. We now say, unrenowned.

For all he did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame
To sluggish sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irrenowned shame. F. Q.
IRREPARABLE. adj. [irreparabilis, Lat. irrepara- ble, Fr.] Not to be recovered; not to be repaired.

Irreparable is the loss, and Patience says it is not past her cure. Shakespeare.

Toil'd with loss irreparable. Milton.
It is an irreparable injustice we are guilty of,
when we are prejudiced by the looks of those whom we do not know. Addison.

The story of Ducalion and Pyrrha teaches, that piety and innocence cannot miss of the divine protection, and that the only loss irreparable is that of our probity. Garib.

IRREPARABLY. adv. [from irreparable.] Without recovery; without amends.

Such adventures befall artists irreparably. Boyle.

The cutting off that time industry and gifts, whereby she would be nourished, were irreparably injurious to her. Decay of Piety.

IRREPLEVABLE. adj. [in and replevy.] Not to be redeemed. A law term.

IRREPREHENSIBLE. adj. [irreprehensibilis, Fr.
irreprehensibilis, Lat.] Exempt from blame.

IRREPREHENSIBLY. adv. [from irreprehensibilis.]
Without blame.

IRREPRESENTABLE. adj. [in and represent.]
Not to be figured by any representation.

God's irrepresentable nature doth hold against making images of God. Stillingfleet.

IRREPROACHABLE. adj. [in and reproachable.]
Free from blame; free from reproach.

He was a serious sincere Christian, of an innocent, irreproachable, nay, exemplary life. Atterb.

Their prayer may be, that they may raise up and breed as irreproachable a young family as their parents have done. Pope.

IRREPROACHABLY. adv. [from irreproachable.]
Without blame; without reproach.

IRREPROVABLE. adj. [in and reprovable.] Not to be blamed; irreproachable.

IRRESISTIBILITY. n. f. [from irresistible.]
Power or force above opposition.

The doctrine of irresistibility of grace, if it be ac-knowledge'd, there is nothing to be affix'd to gratitude. Hammond.

IRRESISTIBLE. adj. [irresistibilis, Fr. in and re- fistibilis.] Superiour to opposition.

Fear doth grow from an apprehension of the Deity, indu'd with irresistible power to hurt; and is of all affections, anger excepted, the unaptest to admit conference with reason. Hooker.

In mighty quadrate join'd
Of union irresistible. Milton.

Fear of God is inward acknowledgment of an holy just Being, armed with almighty and irresisti- ble power. Tillotson.

There can be no difference in the subjects, where the application is almighty and irresistible, as in creation. Rogers.

IRRESISTIBLY. adv. [from irresistible.] In a manner not to be opposed.

God irresistibly sways all manner of events on earth. Dryden.

Fond of pleasing and endearing ourselves to those we esteem, we are irresistibly led into the same inclinations and averions with them. Rogers.

IRRESISTLESS. adj. [A barbarous ungrammatical conjunction of two negatives.] Irresistible;
refractory.

Those radiant eyes, whose irresistible flame
Strikes Envy dumb, and keeps Sedition tame,
They can to gazing multitudes give law,
Convert the factious, and the rebel awe. Granville.

IRRESOLUBLE. adj. [in and resolubilis, Lat.] Not to be broken; not to be dissolved.

In factitious fal ammoniac the common and urinous salts are so well mingled, that both in the open fire and in subliming vessels they rise together as one salt, which seems in such vessels ir- resoluble by fire alone. Boyle.

IRRESOLUBLENESS. n. f. [from irresoluble.] Resistance to separation of the parts.

Quercetanus has this confession of the irresolu- bleness of diamonds.

IRRESOLVEDLY. adv. [in and resolved.] Without settled determination.

Divers of my friends have thought it strange to hear me speak so irresolvably concerning those things, which some take to be the elements, and others the principles of all mixed bodies. Boyle.

IRRESOLUTE. adj. [irresolutus, Fr. in and resolute.]
Not constant in purpose; not determined.

Were he evil us'd, he would outgo
His father, by as much as a performance
Does an irresolute purpose. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Him, after long debate, irresolute
Of thought revolv'd his final sentence chose

Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
To enter. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To make reflections upon what is past, is the part of ingenious but irresolute men. Temple.

So Myrrha's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bent, but cannot long abide;

Irresolute on which she should rely,
At last unfix'd in all, is only fix'd to die. Dryden.

IRRESOLUTELY. adv. [from irresolute.] Without firmness of mind; without determined purpose.

IRRESOLUTION. n. f. [irresolution, Fr. in and re- solution.] Want of firmness of mind.

It hath most force upon things that have the lightest motion, and therefore upon the spirits of men, and in them upon such affections as move lightest; as upon men in fear, or men in irresolu- tion. Bacon's Natural History.

Irresolution on the schemes of life, which offer themselves to our choice, and inconstancy in pursuing them, are the greatest causes of all our unhappiness. Addison.

IRRESPECTIVE. adj. [in and respective.] Having no regard to any circumstances.

Thus did the Jew, by persuading himself of his particular irrespective election, think it safe to run into all sins. Hammond.

According to this doctrine, it must be resolved wholly into the absolute irrespective will of God.

IRRESPECTIVELY. adv. [from irrespective.]
Without regard to circumstances.

He is convinced, that all the promises belong to him absolutely and irrespectively. Hammond.

IRRETREVABLE. adj. [in and retrevable.] Not to be repaired; irrecoverable; irreparable.

IRRETREIVABLY. adv. [from irretrevable.] Ir-reparably; irrecoverably.

It would not defray the charge of the extraction, and therefore must have been all irretrevably lost, and usefess to mankind, was it not by this means collected. Woodward.

IRREVERENCE. n. f. [irreverentia, Lat. irrevere- rence, Fr. in and reverence.]

1. Want of reverence; want of veneration; want of respect.

Having seen our scandalous irreverence towards God's worship in general, 'tis easy to make application to the several parts of it. Decay of Piety.

There were a fort of attributes, with which it was a matter of religion to salute them on all occasions, and which it was an irreverence to omit.

2. State of being disregarded.

The concurrence of the house of peers in that fury can be imputed to no one thing more than to the irreverence and scorn the judges were justly in, who had been always looked upon there as the oracles of the law. Clarendon.

IRREVERENT. adj. [irreverent, Fr. in and revere- rent.] Not paying due homage or reverence; not expressing or conceiving due veneration or respect.

As our fear excludeth not that boldness which becometh faints, so, if our familiarity with God do not favour of fear, it draweth too near that irreverent confidence wherewith true humility can never stand. Hooker.

Knowledge men sought for, and covered it from the vulgar sort as jewels of inestimable price, fearing the irreverent construction of the ignorant and irreligious. Raleigh.

Witness the irreverent son

Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame
Done to his father, heard his heavy curse,

Servant of servants, on his vicious race. Milton.

Swearing, and the irreverent using the name of God in common discourse, is another abuse of the tongue. Rogers.

If an irreverent expression or thought too was are crept into my verses, through my inadvertency, let their authors be answerable for them. Dryden.

IRREVERENTLY. adv. [from irreverent.] Without due respect or veneration.

'Tis but an ill essay of reverence and godly fear to use the gospel irreverently. Govern. of the Tongue.

IRREVERSIBLE. adj. [in and reverse.] Not to be recalled; not to be changed.

The sins of his chamber and his closet shall be produced before men and angels, and an eternal irreversible sentence be pronounced. Rogers.

IRREVERSIBLY. adv. [from irreversible.] Without change.

The title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church, at which so many myriads of solidians have stumbled, and fallen ir- reversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond on Fundamentals.

IRREVOCABLE. adj. [irrevocabilis, Lat. irrevo- cable, French.] Not to be recalled; not to be brought back; not to be reversed.

Give thy hand to Warwick,
And, with thy hand, thy faith irrevocable,

That only Warwick's daughter shall be thine. Shak.

Firm and irrevocable is my doom,
Which I have past upon her. Shak. As you like it.

That which is past is gone and irrevocable, therefore they do but trifle, that labour in past matters.

Bacon's Essays.

The second, both for piety renown'd,
And pious deeds, a promise shall receive

Irrevocable, that his regal throne
For ever shall endure. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By her irrevocable fate,
War shall the country waste, and change the state.

Dryden.

The other victor flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left th' extinguish'd wood;

For ever lost, th' irrevocable light
Forsook the black'ning coals, and sunk to night.

Dryden.

Each sacred accent bears eternal weight,
And each irrevocable word is fate. Pope.

IRREVOCABLY. adv. [from irrevocable.] Without recal.

If air were kept out four or five minutes, the fire would be irrevocably extinguished. Boyle.

To IRRIGATE. v. a. [irrigo, Lat.] To wet;
to moisten; to water.

The heart, which is one of the principle parts of the body, doth continually irrigate, nourish, keep hot, and supple all the members. Ray on the Gra.

They keep a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. A. Phillips.

IRRIGATION. n. f. [from irrigate.] The act of watering or moistening.

Help of ground is by watering and irrigation. Bacon.

IRRIGUOUS. adj. [from irrigate.]

1. Watery; watered.

The flow'ry lap
Of some irriguous valley spreads her store. Milton.

2. Dewy; moist. Phillips seems to have mistaken the Latin phrase irriguous for loper.

Rash Elepenor
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his fureit by irriguous sleep:

Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Phillips.

IRRISION. n. f. [irrisio, Lat. irrisio, French.]
The act of laughing at another.

Ham, by his indiscreet and unnatural irrisio, and exposing of his father, incurs his curse. It eat.

To IRRITATE. v. a. [irrito, Latin; irriter, Fr.]

1. To provoke; to tease; to exasperate.

The earl, speaking to the freeholders in impe-rious language, did not irritate the people. Bacon.

Land's

Land's power at court could not qualify him to go through with that difficult reformation, whilst he had a superior in the church, who, having the reins in his hand, could slacken them, and was thought to be the more remiss to irritate his choleric disposition. Clarendon.

2. To fret; to put into motion or disorder by any irregular or unaccustomed contract; to stimulate; to vellicate.

Cold maketh the spirits vigorous, and irritateth them. Bacon.

3. To heighten; to agitate; to enforce. Air, if very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely, as fire scorseth in frosty weather. Bacon.

When they are collected, the heat becometh more violent and irritate, and thereby expelleth sweat. Bacon's Natural History.

Rous'd
By dash of clouds, or irritating war
Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
They furious spring. Thomson's Seasons.

IRRITATION. n. f. [irritatio, Latin; irritation, French; from irritare.]

1. Provocation; exasperation.

2. Stimulation; vellication. Violent affections and irritations of the nerves, in any part of the body, is caused by something acrimonious. Arbutnot.

IRRUPTION. n. f. [irruption, Fr. irruption, Lat.]

1. The act of any thing forcing an entrance. I refrain, too suddenly,

To utter what will come at last too soon;
Left evil tidings, with too rude irruption,
Hitting thy aged ear, should pierce too deep. Milton.

There are frequent inundations made in maritime countries by the irruption of the sea. Burnet.

A full and sudden irruption of thick melancholick blood into the heart puts a stop to its pulsation. Harvey.

2. Inroad; burst of invaders into any place.

Notwithstanding the irruptions of the barbarous nations, one can scarce imagine how so plentiful a soil should become so miserably unpeopled. Addison.

IS. [ir, Sax. See To BE.]

1. The third person singular of To be: I am, thou art, he is.

He that is of God, heareth God's words. John.

Be not afraid of them, for they cannot do evil; neither is it in them to do good. Jer. x. 5.

My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in fume; and nothing is,
But what is not. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. It is sometimes expressed by is.

There's some among you have beheld me fighting. Shakespeare.

ISCHIADICK. adj. [ischion, ischion; ischiadique, Fr.] In anatomy, an epithet to the crural vein; in pathology, the ischiadick passion is the cut in the hip or the sciatica.

ISCHURY. n. f. [ischuria, ischuria and ischuria, urine; ischuria, Fr. ischuria, Lat.] A stoppage of urine, whether by gravel or other cause.

ISCHURETICK. n. f. [ischuretique, Fr. from ischuria.] Such medicines as force urine when suppressed.

ISS. [irc, Saxon.]

1. A termination added to an adjective to express diminution, a small degree, or incipient state of any quality; as bluish, tending to blue; brightish, somewhat bright.

2. It is likewise sometimes the termination of a gentile or possessive adjective; as Swedish, Danish; the Danish territories, or territories of the Danes.

3. It likewise notes participation of the qualities of the substantive to which it is added: as foolish, manly, manly; rogueish, rogueish.

ISICLE. n. f. [More properly icicle, from ice; but ice should rather be written ise; iss, Saxon.] A pendent shoot of ice.

Do you know this lady?

—The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle
That's curdled by the frost from purest snow Hanging on Dian's temple. Shakespeare.

The frosts and snows her tender body spare;
Those are not limbs for icicles to tear. Dryden.

ISINGLASS. n. f. [from ice, or ise, and glass; ebbycolla, Lat.]

Isinglass is a tough, firm, and light substance, of a whitish colour, and in some degree transparent, much resembling glue. The fish from which isinglass is prepared, is one of the cartilaginous kind: it grows to eighteen and twenty feet in length, and greatly resembles the sturgeon. It is frequent in the Danube, the Boristhenes, the Volga, and the larger rivers of Europe. From the intestines of this fish the isinglass is prepared by boiling. Hill.

The cure of putrefaction requires an incrassating diet, as all viscid broths, hartshorn, ivory, and isinglass. Floyer.

Some make it clear by reiterated fermentations, and others by additions, as isinglass. Mortimer.

ISINGLASS STONE. n. f. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Lat. isola, Italian; caland, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it into the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare.

Within a long recess there lies a bay,
An island shades it from the rolling sea,
And forms a port. Dryden.

Island of bliss! amid the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounce ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Gamden.

Your dinner, and the generous islanders
By you invited, do attend your presence. Shakspeare.

There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison's Freeholder.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
Unpolish'd men, and boist'rous as their seas;
The native islanders alone their care,
And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, Fr. insula, Latin. Pronounce ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
In the feat royal of this famous isle. Shak. Rich. III.

The dreadful fight
Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
And how these monsters did disarm an isle. Wal.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for isle, from isle, French, from ala, Latin, the isle being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from allee, French a walk.] A long walk in a church, or public building.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
Long founding isles and intermingled graves,
Black Melancholy sits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n. f. [isoperimetric, isoperimetric, and isoperimetric.]

In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, Fr.]

1. The act of passing out.

2. Exit; egress; or passage out.

Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms.

Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.

We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.

Spirits are not finely touch'd,
But to fine issues. Shak. Measure for Measure.

If I were ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted, Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest. Shak. Winter's Tale.

But let the issue correspondent prove
To good beginnings of each enterprise. Fairfax.

If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin, till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin forever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present conditions is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the Atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
How wild a passion works within my breast!
With what prodigious flames am I possess'd! Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broome.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.

I am to pray you not to strain my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.

This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wise.

7. Evacuation.

A woman was diseased with an issue of blood. Mat. ix. 20.

7. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!
Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdict stands accurst. Shak.

Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' Head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryden.

The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. [In law.] Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or exences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury. Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alledged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Cowell.

To ISSUE. v. a. [from the noun; issir, French, uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.

Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issued out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.

Waters issued from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issued from the thunderer's head,

2. To make eruption; to break out.

Three of master Ford's brothers watch the door with

IT

with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Haste, arm your Ardeans issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dry.
At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Straight issue through the fides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as offspring.
Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings, xx. 18.
4. To be produced by any fund.

These altars issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.
Pipes, made with a belly towards the lower end, and then issuing into a straight concave again. Bac.
To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To fend out; to fend forth.
A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To fend out judicially or authoritatively.
This is the more frequent sense. It is commonly followed by a participle, out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some nobleman published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god;
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dry.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS, adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.

Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew's Survey.
I have done sin;

For which the Heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [from isthmus, Lat.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.

There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnable fortified. Sandy's Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Caspian seas. Brevewood on Languages.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,

Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and o'erwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stilling.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Greech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wife, and rudely great. Pope.
IT. pronoun. [It, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used be, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used bin. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requirerh another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.

Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Will our great anger learn to stoop so low?
know it cannot. Cowley.

ITC

Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who master art of it. Cowley.

His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flam.
The time will come, it will, when you shall know

The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I speak? or how, fir, can you hear?

Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dry.
A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with so much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Addis. Free.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.

How is it with our general?
—Even so

As with a man by his own arms impoison'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter; the affair.

It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will. Shakespeare's Henry VII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.

He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching foe by nearer foot,

He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hud.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs, to give an emphasis.

If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straits of Thermopylae, when their arms failed them, fought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Addison.

Whether the charmer sinner it, or saint it,
If folly grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludicrously, or rudely to persons.

Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:

It is a peerless kinsman. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Do, child, go to it grandam, child:

Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakespeare's King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il ya of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.

Who was't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you word Macduff is fled to England. Shakespeare's Macb.

City.

'Tis I, that made thy widows. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [itche, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.

Luft and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,

That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shak.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. Deut.

ITE

As if divinity had catch'd
The itch, on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibr.
2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.
A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.

He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch of being thought a divine king. Dryden.

From servants company a child is to be kept, not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue; for he thinks them knaves:

When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin which is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wifeman's Surgery.

My right eye itches; some good luck is near;
Perhaps my Amarylus may appear, Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.

Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.

Cassius, you yourself
Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm,
To sell and mart your offices for gold. Shakespeare.

The itching ears, being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride,
And fain would be upon the laughing side. Pope.

ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. f.

1. A new article.

I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tabled by his side, and I to peruse him by it. Shakespeare.

2. A hint; an innuendo.

If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glanville.

To ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Lat.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.

We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftner than any other part of Scripture besides; the cause whereof we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinctly: the other in concurrence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and so iterateth it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.

Aches burnt, and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.

Adam took no thought

Eating

J U D

Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate
Her former trespass fear'd, the more to footh Him with her lov'd society. Milton's Par. Lost.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.
Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon.
ITERATION. n. f. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Latin.]
Repetition; recital over again.

Truth tir'd with iteration
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shaksp.
My husband!

—Ay, twas he that told me first.

—My husband!

—What needs this iteration, woman?

I say, thy husband. Shaksp. Othello.
Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerans, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Addison.

ITINERARY. n. f. [itinerarius, Fr. itinerarium,
Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy.

ITINERARY. adj. [itinerarius, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.]
Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it were rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon's Hen. VII.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shaksp. Macbeth.

Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets lift'ning stood,
While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milton.

JUBILATION. n. f. [jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.]
The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. f. [jubilæ, Fr. jubilæum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
With jubilæ, and loud hosannas fill'd
Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing:
the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilæ of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilæ of feasts. Dryden.

JUCUNDITY. n. f. [jucunditas, jucundus, Latin.]
Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS TREE. n. f. [sliquastrum, Latin.] A plant.
Judas tree yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers. Mori.

JUDAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr. judaizer, low
Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JUDGE. n. f. [juge, Fr. julex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.

Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?
Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows is God in his holy habitation. Psalms.

Thou art judge

Of all things made, and judgest only right. Mik.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shaksp. Mer. Ven.

A single voice; and that not past me, but
By learned approbation of the judge. Shaksp. Lear.

How darest thou pride,
As in a lifted field to fight your cause,
Unask'd the royal grant; nor marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dry.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully; it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will fit judge himself. Sherl.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit,
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

TO JUDGE. v. n. [juge, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.

My wrong be upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.

Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron.

2. To form or give an opinion.

Bethrew me, but I love her heartily;
For she is wife, if I can judge aright. Shaksp.

Authors to themselves,
Both what they judge and what they chuse. Mik.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job xxii. 13.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor. xi. 13.

How properly the theories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

TO JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.

Chaos shall judge the strife. Milton.

Then those, whom form of laws Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.

2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely.

This is a sense seldom found but in the Scriptures.

He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Psalms cx. 6.

Judge not, that ye be not judged. Matthew.

Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col. ii. 16.

JUDGE. n. f. [from judge.] One who forms judgment; or passes sentence.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.

They who guide themselves meerly by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JUDGMENT. n. f. [judgement, Fr.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.

O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason. Shaksp. Jul. Cæs.

The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be true or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so, this tree is high.
Watt.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God;
For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shaksp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.

When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclos'd
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Glanville.

We shall make a certain judgment what kind of dissolution that earth was capable of. Burnet's Th.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing propriety and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Dennis.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

I see mens judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleopatra.

When she did think my master lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shak.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd With agony. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

The chief priests informed me, desiring to have judgment against him. Acts, xxv. 15.

On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd. Mik.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one to condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification.
Rom. v. 16.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by Providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble,
Touches us not with pity. Shaksp. K. Lear.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitable-ness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments; it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts, xviii. 12.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shak.

In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own.
Taylor.

A bold and wise petitioner goes strait to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbuthnot.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee
the covenant. Deut.

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his fight. Shak.

JUDICATORY. n. f. [judicio, Lat.]

No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clerendon.

2. Court of justice.

Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Atterbury.

JUDICATURE. n. f. [judicature, French; judicio,
Latin.]

1. Power of distributing justice.

The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.

2. Court of justice.

In judicatures to take away the trumpet, the scarlet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South.

JUDICIAL. adj. [judicium, Lat.]

1. Practised

1. Practised in the distribution of publick justice.
What government can be without judicial proceedings?

And what judicature without a religious oath?
Bentley.

2. Inflicted on as a penalty.

The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness.
South.
JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.

It will behave us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare.
Grew.

JUDICIARY. adj. [judicare, Fr. judiciarius, Lat.] Passing judgment upon any thing.

Before weight be laid upon judiciary astrologers, the influence of constellations ought to be made out.
Boyle.

JUDICIOUS. adj. [judicieux, Fr.] Prudent; wise; skilful in any matter or affair.

For your husband,
He's noble, wife, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Love hath his feat

In reason, and is judicious.
Milton.

To each favour meaning we apply,
And palate call judicious.
Milton.
We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them.
Locke.

JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious.] Skilfully; wisely; with just determination.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular.
Dryden.
Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence.
Dryden.

JOC. n. f. [jucge, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.
You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because she bought stone jugs and no seal'd quarts.
Shakespeare.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brink.
Swift.
To JUCGLE. v. n. [jougler or jongler, Fr. joculari, Lat.]

1. To play tricks by flight of hand; to shew false appearances of extraordinary performances.
The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests.
Digby.

2. To practice artifice or imposture.
Be these juggling fiends no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense.
Shakespeare.
Is't possible the spells of France should juggle
Men into such strange mockeries?
Sh. Henry VIII.
They ne'er forswore themselves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends consents;
Nor juggl'd about settlements.
Hudibras.

JUCGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A trick by legerdmain.
2. An imposture; a deception.
The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience.
Tillotson.

JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]
1. One who practises flight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.
They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drug-working foreracers that change the mind,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks
And many such like libertines of sin.
Shakespeare.
I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought.
Bacon.
Aristæus was a famous poet, that flourished in the days of Cræsus, and a notable juggler.
Sandys's Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and imposters, do daily delude them.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The juggler which another's flight can shew,
But teaches how the world his own may know.
Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand, but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles.

Addison's Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main;
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes.
Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.
O me, you juggler; oh, you canker blossom,
You thief of love; what, have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him?
Shakespeare.

I find no harm
To officer, juggler, or justice of peace.
Donne.
JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JUGULAR. adj. [jugulum, Lat.] Belonging to the throat.
A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck.
Wiseman's Surgery.

JUICE. n. f. [jus, Fr. juys, Dutch.]
1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid.
Watts's Logic.
Unnumber'd fruits,
A friendly juice to cool thirst's rage contain.
Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.
Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice: but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone.
Ben Jonson's Discovery.

An animal, whose juices are unfound can never be nourished: unfound juices can never repair the fluids.
Arbutnot.

JUCELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice.

Divine Providence has spread her table every where; not with a juiceless green carpet, but with a succulent herbage and nourishing grass.
More.

When Boreas' spirit blusters fore,
Beware th' inclement heav'ns: now let thy hearth
Crackle with juiceless boughs.
Phillips.

JUCINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JUCY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance.
Bacon's Natural History.

Each plant and juiceless gourd will pluck.
Milton.
The milk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring.
Phillips.

To JUKE. v. n. [jucker, Fr.]
1. To perch upon any thing, as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money: the money merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juking and toffing of his head.
L'Estrange.

JUJUB. n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone.
Miller.

JULAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original; julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.]

Julep is an extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serves for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.
Quincy.

Behold this cordial julep here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant spirits mixt.
Mil.
If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and contemperate the heat and acrimony by juleps and emulsions.
Wiseman's Surgery.

JULUS. n. f.
1. July flower.

2. Julius, in botany, among botanists, denotes those long wormlike tufts or palms, as they are called in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazles, walnut-trees, &c.

Miller.

JULY. n. f. [Julius, Lat. juillet, Fr.] The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt.
Peacbam.

JUMART. n. f. [French.]

Mules and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent.
Locke.

To JUMBLE. v. a. [in Chaucer, jembre, from comblor, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised; but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed.
L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of Scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy Scripture.
Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky mains make people wise;
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, form a poem.
Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter?
Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race.
Pope's Dunciad.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concurrence of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy.
Swift.

To JUMBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony.
Swift.

JUMBLE. n. f. [from the verb.] Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable.
Glarville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice.
Swift.

JUMENT. n. f. [jument, Fr. jumentum, Lat.] Beast of burthen.

Juments, as horses, oxen, and asses, have no eructation or belching.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To JUMP. v. n. [jumpen, Dutch.]

1. To leap; to skip; to move without step or sliding.

Not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and an half by the square.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless, quench their thirst, while I look on,
And take me for their fellow-citizen.
Dryden.

So have I seen from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together,
Swim where the bird of Jove would sink,
And swimming never wet a feather.
Swift.

Candidates petition the emperor to entertain the court with a dance on the rope; and whoever jumps the highest succeeds in the office.
Gulliver's Travels.

2. To leap suddenly.

One Peregrinus jumped into a fiery furnace at the Olympick games, only to shew the company how far his vanity could carry him.
Collier.

We see a little, presume a great deal, and so jump to the conclusion.
Spectator.

3. To jolt.
The noise of the prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots.
Nab. iii. 2.

4. To agree; to tally; to join.
Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.
In some sort it jumps with my humour.
Shakespeare.

JUN

But though they jump not on a just account,
Yet do they all confirm a Turkish fleet. Shaksp.
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barba'rous nations. Shaksp.
Herein perchance he jumps not with Liplius. Hakewill.

Never did trusty squire with knight,
Or knight with squire, e'er jump more right;
Their arms and equipage did fit,
As well as virtues, parts, and wit. Hudibras.
This shews how perfectly the rump
And commonwealth in nature jump:
For as a fly that goes to bed,
Rests with his tail above his head;
So in this mungrel state of ours,
The rabble are the supreme powers. Hudibras.
Good wits jump, and mine the nimble of the two. More.

Good now, how your devotions jump with mine!
Dryden.
I am happier for finding our judgments jump in the notion. Pope to Swift.

To JUMP. v. a. To pass by a leap; to pass eagerly or carelessly over.

Here, upon this bank and shelve of time,
We'd jump the life to come. Shaksp. Macbeth.
JUMP. adv. Exactly; nicely. Obsolete.

Otherwise one man could not excel another, but all should be either absolutely good, as hitting jump that indivisible point or center wherein goodness consisteth; or else missing it, they should be excluded out of the number of well-doers. Hooker.

But since so jump upon this bloody question,
You from the Polack wars, and you from England,
Are here arriv'd. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Myself the while to draw the Moor apart,
And bring him jump, when he may Cassio find Soliciting his wife. Shaksp. Othello.

JUMP. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. The act of jumping; a leap; a skip.

The surest way for a learner is, not to advance by jumps and large strides; let that, which he sets himself to learn next, be as nearly conjoined with what he knows already, as is possible. Locke.

2. A lucky chance.

Do not exceed
The prescript of this scrowl: our fortune lies Upon this jump. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

1. Cheesecake; a kind of sweetmeat of curds and sugar.

2. Any delicacy.

A goodly table of pure ivory,
All spread with juncates, fit to entertain
The greatest prince. Spenser.

With stories told of many a feat,
How fairly Mab the juncates eat. Milton.

3. A furtive or private entertainment. It is now improperly written junket in this sense, which alone remains much in use. See JUNKET.

JUNCOSUS. adj. [juncus, Lat.] Full of bulrushes.

JUNCTION. n. f. [junction, Fr.] Union; coalition.

Upon the junction of the two corps, our spies discovered a great cloud of dust. Addison.

JUNCTURE. n. f. [junctura, Lat.]
1. The line at which two things are joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which being extremely little, may escape unheeded at the junctures of the diffusatory vessels, though never so carefully luted.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. More.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale.

JUR

3. Union; amity.
Nor are the fobereft of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me. King Charles.

by stealth.

Whatever good bits you can pilfer in the day, save them to junket with your fellow-servants at night. Swift.

2. To feast.

Job's children junketed and feasted together often,
but the reckoning cost them dear at last. South.

The apostle would have no revelling or junketing.

JUNTO. n. f. [Italian.] A cabal; a kind of men combined in any secret design.

Would men have spent toilsome days and watchful nights in the laborious quest of knowledge preparative to this work, at length come and dance attendance for approbation upon a junto of petty tyrants, acted by party and prejudice, who denied fitness from learning, and grace from morality? South.

From this time began an intrigue between his majesty and a junto of ministers, which had like to have ended in my destruction. Gulliv. Trav.

IVORY. n. f. [ivoire, Fr. ebur, Lat.]

Ivory is a hard, solid, and firm substance, of a fine white colour: it is the dens exsertus of an elephant, who carries on each side of his jaws a tooth of six or seven feet in length: the two sometimes weighing three hundred and thirty pounds:
these ivory tusks are hollow from the base to a certain height, and the cavity is filled with a compact medullary substance. Hill.

There is more difference between thy flesh and hers, than between jet and ivory. Shaksp. M. of V.

Draw Erato with a sweet and lovely countenance, bearing a heart with an ivory key. Peacham.

From their ivory port the cherubim Forth issu'd. Milton.

Two gates the silent house of sleep adorn,
Of polish'd ivory this, that of transparent horn:

True visions through transparent horn arise,
Through polish'd ivory pass deluding lies. Dr. Aen.

French.]

1. Acting in the distribution of justice.
2. Used in courts of justice.

According to a juridical account and legal signification, time within memory, by the statute of Westminster, was settled in the beginning of the reign of king Richard the First. Hale.

JURIDICALLY. adv. [from juridical.] With legal authority; according to forms of justice.

JURISCONSULT. n. f. [juris consultus, Latin.]
One who gives his opinion in cases of law.

There is mention made, in a decision of the jurisconsult Javolemus, of a Britannick fleet.

JURISDICTION. n. f. [jurisdictio, Lat. jurisdiction, Fr.]

1. Legal authority; extent of power.
Sometimes the practice of such jurisdiction may swerve through error even in the very best, and for other respects, where less integrity is. Hooker.

You wrought to be a legate; by which power
You main'd the jurisdiction of all bishops. Shaksp.

All persons exercising ecclesiastical jurisdiction should have the king's arms in their seals of office.

This place exempt
From Heav'n's high jurisdiction. Milton.

As Adam had no such power as gave him sovereign jurisdiction over mankind. Locke.

This custom in a popular state, of impeaching particular men, may seem to be nothing else but the people's chusing to exercise their own jurisdiction in person. Swift.

2. District to which any authority extends.

JURISPRUDENCE. n. f. [jurisprudence, Fr. jurif-prudentia, Lat.] The science of law.

yer; a man who professes the science of the law;
a civilian.

This is not to be measured by the principles of jurists. Bacon.

JUROR. n. f. [juro, Lat.] One that serves on the jury.

Were the jurors picked out of choice men, the evidence will be as deceitful as the verdict. Spenser.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

I sing no harm, good sooth! to any wight,
Juror, or judge. Donne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in.

JURY. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.]

Jury, a company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver a truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question. There be three manners of trials in England: one by parliament, another by battle, and the third by affize or jury. The trial by affize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private,
personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest:
if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest: the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner: so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or affize; affize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used.

This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errant, commonly called the great affizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billa vera, or disallow, by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party, traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant: according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began; and the reason hereof is, because these juries of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the countries only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and so return it to the court where the cause is depending.

Cowel.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try. Shakespeare.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness. Shakespeare.

Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict. Bacon.

JURYMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impanelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign,
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine. Pope.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench, to use the least insinuation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury. Swift.

JURYMANS. n. f. It seems to be properly durée maît, mat de durée, a maît made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a maît lost in a fight, or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost maît, fastening it into the partners, and fitting it to the mizen or some lesser yard with fails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Latin.]
1. Upright; incorrupt; equitable in the distribution of justice.

Take it, while yet 'tis praise, before my rage
Unsafely just, break loose on this bad age. Dryden.

Men are commonly so just to virtue and goodness, as to praise it in others, even when they do not practise it themselves. Tillotson's Sermons.
2. Honest; without crime in dealing with others.

Just balances, just weights, and a just ephah. Levit. xix.

3. I know not whether just of has any other authority.
Just of thy word, in ev'ry thought sincere,
Who knew no wish but what the world might hear. Pope.

4. Exact; proper; accurate.
Boileau's numbers are excellent, his expressions noble, his thoughts just, his language pure, and his sense close. Dryden.

These scenes were wrought,
Embellish'd with good morals and just thought. Granville.

Just precepts thus from great examples giv'n,
She drew from them what they deriv'd from Heaven. Pope.

Just to the tale, as present at the fray,
Or taught the labours of the dreadful way. Pope.

Once on a time La Mancha's knight they say,
A certain bard encount'ring on the way,
Discours'd in terms as just, with looks as sage,
As ere could Dennis of the laws o' th' stage. Pope.

Though the syllogism be irregular, yet the inferences are just and true. Watts's Logic.

5. Virtuous; innocent; pure.
How should man be just with God? Job.

A just man falleth seven times and riseth. Prov.
He shall be recompensed at the resurrection of the just. Mat.

The just th' unjust to serve. Milton.
6. True; not forged.

Crimes were laid to his charge too many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit. Hooker.

7. Grounded on principles of justice; rightful.
Me though just right

Did first create your leader. Milton.
8. Equally retributed.

He received a just recompence of reward. Heb.
Whose damnation is just. Rom. iii. 8.

As Hesioid sings, spread water o'er thy fields,
And a moist just and glad increase it yields. Denb.

9. Complete without superfluity or defect.
He was a comely personage, a little above just stature, well and strait limbed, but slender. Bacon.

10. Regular; orderly.
When all

The war shall stand ranged in its just array,
And dreadful pomp, then will I think on thee. Addison.

11. Exactly proportioned.
The prince is here at hand: pleaseth your lordship

To meet his grace, just distance 'tween our armies. Shakespeare.

12. Full; of full dimensions.
His soldiers had skirmishes with the Numidians, so that once the skirmish was like to have come to a just battle. Knolles's History.

There is not any one particular above mentioned, but would take up the business of a just volume. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

There seldom appeared a just army in the civil wars. Dutchess of Newcastle.

JUST. adv.
1. Exactly; nicely; accurately.

The good Pan guided my hand just to the heart of the beast. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,

Where last the spectre was, she cast her look. Dryden.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.
It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all. L'Estr.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail. Dry.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryden.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.
Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. f. [juste, Fr.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament. Just is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than just, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs? Shakespeare.

Among themselves the tourney they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side;
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began. Dryd.

To JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]
1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive; to juggle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, Fr. justitia, Lat.]
1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, respecting common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stabilities,
I have no reliſh of them. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be conversant about something that is due to another. Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right: as, be proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment: opposed to mercy.
He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.

Let justice overtake us. Iſa. lix. 9.
Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon's Adv. to Villiers.

4. Right; assertion of right.
Draw thy sword,

That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare. King Lear.

5. [Justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowel.

And thou, Eſdras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Eſdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [Justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest; wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Angliæ. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like: but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them. Cowel.

Give that whipster his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [Justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowel.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [Justiciarius Forestæ.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond. Cowel.

9. JUSTICES of Assize. [Justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assizes; the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission mission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowel.

10. JU'STICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient time, was to send them with commission into divers counties, to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowel.

11. JU'STICES of Gaol Delivery. [justicarii ad Gaolas deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprize those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient times, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowel.

12. JU'STICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justicarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius, as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowel.

13. JU'STICES of Peace. [justicarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowel.

The justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wife laws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakesp. As you like it.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakespeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saying that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JU'STICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. A word not in use.

As for the title of procription, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JU'STICEMENT. n. f. [from justice.] Procedure in courts.

JU'STICER. n. f. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JU'STICESHIP. n. f. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JU'STIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just are the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown.

JU'STIFIABLENESS. n. f. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JU'STIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly. A man may more justifiably throw crosses and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [justification, French; justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope, for my brother's justification, he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shak. King Lear.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments, in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past. Clarke.

In such righteousness

To them by faith imputed, they may find

Justification towards God, and peace
Of conscience. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATION. n. f. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JU'STIFIER. n. f. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Rom. iii. 26.

To JU'STIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor;
I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.

They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman. Job.

There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifieth in judgment. Eccles.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified, nor yet accus'd. Dryden.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate.

When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sidney.

What she did, whatever in itself,
Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods enforce,
And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy fools shall stand in thy defence,
And justify their author's want of sense. Dryden.

Let others justify their missions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon.

By him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses, Acts.

To JU'STLE. v. n. [from just, joust, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by
All time of pause, rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure. Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nab.

Argo pass'd,
Through Bosphorous, betwixt the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds
Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the flant lightning. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not one starry spark,
But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant;
And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear,
And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant gainst elephant did rear
His trunk, and castles justled in the air,
My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had fet bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid;
then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashings in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud
To justle here among a crowd. Swift.

To JU'STLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The furly commons shall respect deny,
And justle peerage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all their libraries. Holder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post.
Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unhappiness in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Addison's Guardian.

JU'STLV. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner.

Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open fight:
Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword

Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.

2. Properly; exactly; accurately.

Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. f. [from just.]

1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.

It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.
Spenser on Ireland.

We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it. Shakesp.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.

I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented with all the justness and gracefulness of action.
Dryden.

I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison's Guard.

To JUT. v. n. [This word is supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences to come out beyond the main bulk.

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless throne. Shakesp.

All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the cornices of the lower orders.
Watton.

The

JUV

The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and jutt'd to the sea. Dryden.
Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.
It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem,
and be independent of it. Broom's Notes on the Odyf.
To JUTTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.

Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it ply through the portage of the head
Like a brais cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as doth a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean.

Shakespeare.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.] Young; youthful.

Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is fo-lid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust.

Bacon's Essays

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenilis.]

1. Youthfulness.

The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle.

Glanville.

2. Light and careless manner.

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications.

Glanville.

JUTTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition, French; juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposition; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

JYM

JYM. n. f. [jym, Saxon; bedera, Latin.] A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment.

Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;

A belt of straw, and ivy buds,

With coral clasps and amber studs;

And if these pleasures may thee move,

Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.

Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milt.

JYMOLD. adj. [See GIMAL.]

Their poor jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit

Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless.

Shakespeare.

K.

KAY

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, sick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with c final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, leak. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KALENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand as accursed in the calendar. Shakespeare. Macb.

KALI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea-weed, of the ashes of which glass was made; whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.

Kam, in Erfe, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, crofs from the purpose. A-schembo, Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim kam.

This is clean kam; meerly awry. Shakespeare.

TO KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaw her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance.

Sidney.

KED

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carew's Survey.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

TO KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Natural History.

The faction, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

TO KECKLE. v. a. To defend a cable round with rope.

Ainsworth.

KECKSY. n. f. [commonly kex, cigue, French; cicuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or kex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, keckfies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare. Henry V.

KECKY. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

TO KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the forefall, or fore-top-sail and mizen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KEE

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KEE, the provincial plural of cow, properly kine.

A lafs that Cic'ly hight had won his heart,
Cic'ly the western lafs that tends the kee. Gay's Past.

KE'DLACK. n. f. A weed among corn; charnock. Tusser.

KEEL. n. f. [cœle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, Fr.] The bottom of the ship.

Portunus

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder.

Grew's Cosmol.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous ent'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles; which see.

TO KEEL. v. a. [cælan, Saxon.] This word, which is preserved in Shakespeare, Hammer explains thus:

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep, as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hammer.

In Ireland, to keel the pot is to scum it.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot. Shakespeare.

KE'ELFAT. n. f. [cælan, Saxon, to cool, and fat or vat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. f. The next piece of timber in a ship next to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

TO KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and bale.] To punish in the seaman's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cene, Saxon; kahn, German; koen, Dutch.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt.

Come thick night,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes.

Shakespeare.

Here is my keen-edged sword,

Deck'd with fine flower de-luces on each side. Sh.
To

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my fabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.
 A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
 The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryd.
 2. Severe; piercing.

The winds

Blow moist, and keen, shattering the graceful locks
 Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek Some better shroud. Milton's Par. Lost.

The cold was very supposable; but as it changed
 To the north-west, or north, it became excelsively keen.
Ellis's Voyage.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know

A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
 So keen and greedy to confound a man. Shakespeare.
Keen dispatch of real hunger. Milton.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat. L'Estrange.
 Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game. Tatler.

This was a prospect to very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have to keen an appetite for wealth. Swift.

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.

Good father cardinal, cry thou, Amen,
 To my keen curses. Shaksp. King John.

I have known some of these absent officers as keen against Ireland, as if they had never been indebted to her. Swift.

To KEEN. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sharpen. An unauthorized word.

Nor when cold Winter keens the brightening
 flood,
 Would I weak shivering linger on the brink. Thomson.

KE'ENLY. adj. [from keen.] Sharply; vehemently; eagerly; bitterly.

KE'ENNESS. n. f. [from keen.]

1. Sharpness; edge.

No, not the hangman's ax bears half the keen-
ness.

Of thy sharp envy. Shakespeare's Merch. of Ven.

2. Rigour of weather; piercing cold.

3. Asperity; bitterness of mind.

That they might keep up the keenness against the court, his lordship furnished them with informations, to the king's disadvantage. Clarendon.

The sting of every reproachful speech is the Ill fenc'd for Heav'n to keep out such a foe.

29. To KEEP back. To reserve; to with-hold.

Whatsoever the Lord shall answer, I will declare: I will keep nothing back from you. Jer. xlii. 4.

Some are so close and reserved, as they will not show their wares but by a dark light, and seem always to keep back somewhat. Bacon's Essays.

30. To KEEP back. To with-hold; to restrain.

Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins.

31. To KEEP company. To frequent any one;

to accompany.

Heav'n doth know, so shall the world perceive,

That I have turn'd away my former self,

So will I those that kept me company. Shak. Hen. IV.

Why should he call her whore? Who keeps her company?

What place; what time? Shaksp. Othello.

What mean's thou, bride! this company to keep?

To sit up, till thou fain would sleep? Donne.

Neither will I wretched thee

In death forsake, but keep thee company. Dryden.

32. To KEEP company with. To have familiar intercourse.

A virtuous woman is obliged not only to avoid immodesty, but the appearance of it; and she could not approve of a young woman keeping company with men, without the permission of father or mother. Broom on the Odyssey.

33. To KEEP in. To conceal; not to tell.

I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in. Shaksp. Lear.

Syphax, your zeal becomes importunate;

I have hitherto permitted it to rave,

And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,

Left it should take more freedom than I'll give it.

34. To KEEP in. To restrain; to curb.

If thy daughter be shameless, keep her in straight-houses in a line to posterity. Addison.

During his studies and travels he kept up a punctual correspondence with Eudoxus. Addison.

39. To KEEP under. To oppress; to subdue.

O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies, that we keep under our appetites, and do not let them loose into the enjoyments of sense. Atterbury.

The hemisphere of earth, in clearest ken,
Stretch'd out th' amplest reach of prospect, lay Milton.

He soon

Saw within ken a glorious angel stand. Milton.
Rude, as their ships, was navigation then;

No useful compass or meridian known:
Coasting they kept the land within their ken,

And knew the North but when the pole-star shone. Dryden.

When we consider the reasons we have to think, that what lies within our ken is but a small part of the universe, we shall discover an huge abyss of ignorance. Locke.

His keftrel kind,
A pleasing vein of glory, vain did find. F. Queen.

Kites and keftrels have a resemblance with hawks.
Bacon.

KETCH. n. f. [from caicchio, Italian, a barrel.]
A heavy ship; as a bomb ketch.

I wonder
That such a ketch can with his very bulk Take up the rays o' th' beneficial sun,
And keep it from the earth.

Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
KE'TTLE. n. f. [cezl, Saxon; ketyl, Dutch.]
A vessel in which liquor is boiled. In the kitchen the name of pot is given to the boiler that grows narrower towards the top, and of kettle to that which grows wider. In authors they are confounded.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little feather shone. Dry.

KE'TTLEDUM. n. f. [kettle and drum.] A drum of which the head is spread over a body of brass.

As he drains his draughts of Rhenish down,
The kettledrum and trumpet thus Bray out
The triumph of his pledge. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

KEY. n. f. [coeg, Saxon.]

1. An instrument formed with cavities correspondent to the wards of a lock, by which the bolt of a lock is pushed forward or backward.

If a man were porter of hell gate, he should have old turning the key. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Sba. King Lear.

The glorious standard left to heav'n they spread,
With Peter's keys ennobled and his crown. Fairfax.

Yet some there be, that by due steps aspire
To lay their just hands on that golden key,
That opes the palace of eternity. Milton.

Conscience is its own counsellor, the sole master of its own secrets; and it is the privilege of our nature, that every man should keep the key of his own breast. South.

He came, and knocking thrice, without delay
The longing lady heard, and turn'd the key. Dry.

2. An instrument by which something is screwed or turned.

Hide the key of the jack. Swift.

3. An explanation of any thing difficult.

An emblem without a key to't, is no more than a tale of a tub. L'Estrange.

These notions, in the writings of the ancients darkly delivered, receive a clearer light when compared with this theory, which represents every thing plainly, and is a key to their thoughts. Burr.

Those who are accustomed to reason have got the true key of books. Locke.

4. The parts of a musical instrument which are struck with the fingers.

Pamela loves to handle the spinnet, and touch
the keys. Pam.

5. [In music.] Is a certain tone whereto every composition, whether long or short, ought to be fitted; and this key is said to be either flat or sharp, not in respect of its own nature, but with relation to the flat or sharp third, which is joined with it. Harvis.

Hippolita, I woo'd thee with my sword,
And won thy love doing thee injuries;
But I will wed thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph, and with revelling. Shakespeare.

But speak you with a sad brow? Or do you play the flouting Jack? Come, in what key shall a man take you to go in the song? Shakespeare.

Not know my voice! Oh, time's extremity!
Hast thou so crack'd and splinted my poor tongue
in

In few'n short years, that here my only son

Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares? Shak.

6. [Kaye, Dutch; quai, French.] A bank raised perpendicular for the ease of lading and un-lading ships.

A key of fire ran along the shore,

And lighten'd all the river with a blaze. Dryden.

One boasted of the cure, calling them a few kibes. Wise-man.

KIBED. adj. [from kibe.] Troubled with kibes: as, kibed heels.

To KICK. v. a. [Kaichen, German; calco, Lat.] To strike with the foot.

He must endure and digest all affronts, adore the foot that kicks him, and kiss the hand that strikes him. South.

It anger'd Turenne once upon a day,

To see a footman kick'd that took his pay. Pope.

Another, whose son had employments at court, valued not, now and then, a kicking or a caning. Swift.

To KICK. v. n. To beat the foot in anger or contempt.

Wherefore kick ye at my sacrifice, which I have commanded? I Sam. ii. 29.

Jeshurun waxed fat and kicked. Deut. xxxii. 15.

The doctrines of the holy Scriptures are terrible enemies to wicked men, and this is that which makes them kick against religion, and spurn at the doctrines of that holy book. Tillotson.

KICK. n. f. [from the verb.] A blow with the foot.

What, are you dumb? Quick, with your answer, quick,

Before my foot salutes you with a kick. Dr. Juv.

KICKER. n. f. [from kick.] One who strikes with his foot.

KICKSHAW. n. f. [This word is supposed, I think with truth, to be only a corruption of quelque chose, something; yet Milton seems to have understood it otherwise; for he writes it kickshaw, as if he thought it used in contempt of dancing.]

1. Something uncommon; fantastical; something ridiculous.

Shall we need the monseurs of Paris to take our youth into their slight custodies, and send them over back again transformed into mimicks, apes, and kickshaws? Milton.

2. A dish so changed by the cookery that it can scarcely be known.

Some pigeons, a joint of mutton, and any pretty little tiny kickshaws. Shaksp. Henry IV.

In wit, as well as war, they give us vigour;

Grossly was lost by kickshaws and soup-meagre. Fonten.

KICKSY-WICKSY. n. f. [from kick and wince.]

A made word in ridicule and disdain of a wife. Hammer.

He wears his honour in a box, unseen,

That hugs his kicksey-wicksey here at home,

Spending his manly marrow in her arms. Shak.

KID. n. f. [kid, Danish.]

1. The young of a goat.

Leaping like wanton kids in pleasant spring. Fairy Queen.

There was a herd of goats with their young ones, upon which fight Sir Richard Graham tells,

he would snap one of the kids, and carry him close to their lodging. Wotton.

Sporting the lion ramp'd, and in his paw

Dandled the kid. Milton.

So kids and whelps their fires and dams express;

And so the great I measur'd by the lefs. Dryden.

2. [From cidwlen, Welsh, a faggot.] A bundle of heath or furze.

To KID. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth kids.

KIDDER. n. f. An ingroffer of corn to enhance its price. Ainsw.

To KIDNAP. v. a. [from kind, Dutch, a child, and nap.] To steal children; to steal human beings.

KIDNAPPER. n. f. [from kidnap.] One who steals human beings; a manstealer.

The man compounded with the merchant, upon condition that he might have his child again; for he had smelt it out, that the merchant himself was the kidnapper. L'Estrange.

These people lie in wait for our children, and may be considered as a kind of kidnappers within the law. Spektator.

KIDNEY. n. f. [Etymology unknown.]

1. These are two in number, one on each side: they have the same figure as kidneybeans: their length is four or five fingers, their breadth three, and their thickness two: the right is under the liver, and the left under the spleen. The use of the kidneys is to separate the urine from the blood, which, by the motion of the heart and arteries, is thrust into the emulgent branches, which carry it to the little glands, by which the serosity being separated, is received by the orifice of the little tubes, which go from the glands to the pelvis, and from thence it runs by the ureters into the bladder. Quincy.

A youth laboured under a complication of diseases, from his mesentery and kidneys. Wise-man.

2. Sort; kind: in ludicrous language.

Think of that, a man of my kidney; think of that, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakespeare.

There are millions in the world of this man's kidney, that take up the same resolution without noise. L'Estrange.

KIDNEYBEAN. n. f. [phascolus. So named from its shape.] A leguminous plant.

Kidneybeans are a sort of cod ware, that are very pleasant wholesome food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wifeman.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. f. [aspodelus.] A plant.

KINGSTONE. n. f. [squatina.] A fish. Ainsw.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks. Spenser.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. Job xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,

Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right,

Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sidney.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cýrce, Saxon; xwvovv.] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to dight,

And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,

With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spem.

Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,

There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Clavel.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KIRTLE. n. f. [cýrtel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say

He clothed was. Fairy Queen.

What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakespeare. Henry IV.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,

Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy poeiesies,

Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,

In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

To KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; xw.]

1. To touch with the lips.

But who those ruddy lips can miss,

Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.

He took

The bride about the neck, and kiss'd her lips

With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting

All the church echo'd. Shakespeare. Tamm. Shrew.

Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,

And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shakespeare.

2. To treat with fondness.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,

So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,

They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Sh.

3. To touch gently.

The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,

And they did make no noise. Shakespeare.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.

What fense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?

I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakespeare.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:

O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGCRUST. n. f. [kissing and crust.] Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

These bak'd him kissing-crusts, and those brought him small beer. King's Cookery.

KIT. n. f. [kitte, Dutch.]

1. A large bottle. Skinner.

2. A small diminutive fiddle.

'Tis kept in a case fitted to it, almost like a dancing-master's kit. Grew's Museum.

3. A small wooden vessel, in which Newcastle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flemish;

cýcene, Saxon; cuisin, French; cucina, Italian;

kyben, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.

These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hosker.

He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,

No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.]

Garden in which esculent plants are produced.

Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchen-gardens. Bacon.

A kitchen-garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spenser.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.] A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.] The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.

As a thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,

And barreling the droppings and the muff

Of waisting candles, which in thirty year,

Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry

A gospel-preaching ministry. Hadibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.]

Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.

Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Sh.

Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench. Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. f. [kitchen and work.] Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cýta, Saxon; milvus.]

1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,

While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shak.

The heron, when the soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.

A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.

Detested kite! thou liest. Shakespeare. K. Lear.

3. A fictitious bird made of paper.

A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gov. of the Tongue.

KITTENFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsworth.

KITTEN. n. f. [kattekn, Dutch.] It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten, or young cats,

which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.

That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and kittens. Brown.

It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wifem.

Helen was just slept into bed;

Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,

Away the kitten with them fled,

As fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done

At the same season, if your mother's cat

Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakespeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak,

and the cat kitten'd in the hollow trunk of it. Left.

To KLICK. v. n. [from cluck.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.

2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knap, Erse.]

K N A

K N A

To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knop may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNA'BBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.

Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron. Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnappinge, skill, Sax.]

1. A little machine; a pretty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont To load my she with knacks: I would have ran-fack'd

The pedlar's filken, treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance. Shakspeare. Winter's Tale.

For thee, fond boy, If I may ever know thou do'st but sigh That thou no more shall see this knack, as never I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer, A velvet dish; fie, 'tis lewd and filthy: Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell, A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakspeare.

But is't not presumption to write verse to you, Who make the better poems of the two? For all these pretty knacks that you compose, Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets, And found a watch, with rings and lockets; A copper-plate, with almanacks Engrav'd upon't with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

I'll teach you the knacks

Of eating of flax,

And out of their noses

Draw ribbands and posies. B. Jonson.

The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knives, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another, about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,

And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

1. A nice trick.

For how should equal colours do the knack? Camcleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNA'CKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.

One part for plow-right, knacker, and smith. Mor.

2. A rope-maker. [Refio, Latin.] Answe.

KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNA'GGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnep, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knop of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.

He knappeth the spear in funder. Com. Prayer.

He will knop the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

K N A

2. [Knapp, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.

Knop a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knop in before they knew they were out. Wise-man.

KNA'PBOTTLE. n. f. [popaver spumeum.] A plant.

To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knop.] To break off with a sharp quick noise. Answeorth.

KNA'PSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and barns in Winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNA'PWEEED. n. f. [juncus, Latin.] A plant. Mill.

KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground, And prickly stubs instead of trees are found; Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old, Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNA'VE. n. f. [cnappa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please

With gentle beams not hurting fight,

Yet bath fir sun the greater praise,

Because from him doth come her light;

So if my man must praise have,

What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves;

A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estr.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;

But idiot's only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.

See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,

If we are brought in play upon't,

Or but by casting knaves get in,

What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNA'VERY. n. f. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villainy.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do't; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare. Wint. Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too,

Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;

'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,

Like Aesop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps for trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,

With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knave'ry. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it all, and knaveish to do it from friend's. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad;

Cupid is a knaveish lad,

Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNA'VISHLY. adj. [from knaveish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

K N E

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnædan, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the knearing, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneced be;

Wisdom makes him an ark where all agree. Dow.

Thus kneced up with milk the new-made man

His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;

'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood,

And pride of empire, pour'd his balmy blood. Dry.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,

And kneced up alike with moist'ning blood. Dryd.

Prometheus, in the knearing up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.

No man ever reapt his corn,

Or from the oven drew his bread,

Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,

That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake the kneced was the fav'ry meat. Prior.

KNEADING TROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.]

A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy knearingtrough. Exodus.

KNEE. n. f. [cnæop, Saxon; knée, Dutch.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh

Thy royal father

Was a most faint king: the queen that bore

thee,

Often upon her knees than on her feet,

Died every day the liv'd. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

Is lay down, and leaning on her knees,

Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;

And cast her languishing regards above,

For help from Heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate

by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent,

fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakspeare.

Return with her!

Why, the hot-blooded France, that dow'rless took

Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and squire-like pension beg. Shakspeare.

KNEED. adv. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as in-kneed, or out-kneed.

2. Having joints: as kneced-grass.

KNEEDEEP. adj. [knée and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunk to the knees.

The country peasant meditates no harm,

When clad with skins of beasts to keep him

warm;

In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,

Almost kneced, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNEEDGRASS. n. f. [gramon geniculatum.] An herb.

KNEEHOLM. n. f. [aquifolium.] An herb. Answe.

KNEEPAN. n. f. [knée and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The

The kneepan must be shewn with the knitting thereof by a fine shadow underneath the joint.

Pearson on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflection; to bend the knee.

When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel down, And ask of thee forgiveness. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd My duty kneeling, came a reeking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth From Goneril, his mistress, salutation. Shakespeare.

A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord have mercy upon my son, for he is lunatick. Mat. As soon as you are dressed, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNEETRIBUTE. n. f. [from knee and tribute.] Genuflection; worship or obedience shown by kneeling.

Receive from us

Kneetributes yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.

KNEEL. n. f. [from knell, Welsh, a funeral pile; cnell, lan, to ring, Saxon.] The sound of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not wish them to a fairer death, And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakespeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell: Shakespeare. Tempest.

Hark, now I hear them. Shakespeare. Tempest.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stirr'd

With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakespeare.

All these motions, which we saw,

Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings

Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,

Which this hours work, as well as hours do tell;

Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella danc'd and sung;

The am'rous youth around her bow'd:

At night her fatal knell was rung;

I saw, and kiss'd her in her throw'd. Prior.

KNEW. The preterite of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives, [comp. Saxon; kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,

And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakespeare.

Blest powers, forbid thy tender life

Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Craftsman.

The sacred priests with ready knives bereave

The heart of life, and in full bowles receive

The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,

And, trembling, in his arms, takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [comp. Sax. knēht, Germ.

a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir

Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,

Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,

Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,

No quire in debt, and no poor knight. Shakespeare.

This knight; but yet why should I call him

knight. Dem. C. W.

To give impiety to this reverent stile?

No quire with knight did better fit

In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakespeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,

Those that slew thy virgin knight;

For the which, with fongs of woe,

Round about her tomb they go. Shakespeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,

Which out of it sent such a smoke,

As ready was them all to choke,

So grievous was the pother;

So that the knights each other lost,

And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring

To help their knights against their king,

And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT ERRANT. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight: one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim

Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights

Won all their mistresses in fights;

They cut whole giants into fritters,

To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT ERRANTRY. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping-post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.^a

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.

George's day he was knighthood. Watson.

The lord protector knighthood the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,

One knighthood Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Becoming a knight; befitting a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knighthood combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws?

As in a listed field to fight your cause:

Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
